PIONEER PACIFIC SERVICE PLANE AT HONOLULU

China Clipper, First Aircraft to Carry Regular Mails Between U.S. and Manila, Reaches Hawaiian City After Flight From Alameda, California; Welcomed at "Cross-roads of Pacific"

Associated Press

Alameda, Cal., Nov. 23—The China Clipper arrived over Honolulu at 12.35 p.m., P.S.T. to-day, completing the first stage of its Pacific flight, Pan-American Airways were advised.

The plane left Alameda, Cal., at 3.47 p.m. yesterday.

To-day's flight was the first stage of an airmail route 8,000 miles across the Pacific.

In compartments of the 25-ton flying boat lay 115,000 letters, nearly two tons of mail for Honolulu and island way points along the sky trail to Manila, end of the present flight.

Thousands of feet beneath the plane as it flew, ocean vessels rolled heavily through swells, their mail cargoes due to arrive days or weeks behind the sky liner.

Earlier dispatches told how Honolulu people were ready to shout a greeting to the seaplane, first of a sky liner fleet which ultimately will carry passengers clear to Canton, China.

Hourly reports by radio had informed Pan-American Airways' headquarters here of the progress of the China Clipper.

FALSE TEETH FOUND IN FISH

Canadian Press

Miami Beach, Fla., Nov. 23.—An affidavit backs up this fish story.

E. W. Tranter, retired navy captain, fishing in the Gulf Stream September 19, sneezed and lost his false teeth overboard.

Yesterday Capt. Olaf Olson, skipper of the charter boat Seahawk, returned to port with several fishermen and large quantities of red snapper.

One of the fish, cut open, yielded the missing teeth.

Japanese Practice War As North China Crisis Grows

Taking a leaf from the strategy set forth in "Macbeath" by Shakespeare, who wrote of soldiers camouflaged as a moving forest, Japanese troops manoeuvring in northern Kanto province used rice straw on equipment and helmets to make detection by aerial observers more difficult. The scene as contending "armies came to grips is pictured above.

Crowds Flock To See Eruption of Hawaii Volcano

Mauna Loa Continues to Emit Streams of Molten Lava; Little Fear of Danger to City of Hilo.

Associated Press

Hilo, Hawaii, Nov. 23.—The Mauna Loa volcano loosed streams of hot lava with undiminished intensity to-day, attracting crowds of sightseers by its spectacular flow.

Parties came from Honolulu, on the neighboring island of Oahu, 200 miles away, by airplane and steamer, with "mattress space only" available on the ship and passengers sleeping on deck.

Five rivers of blazing lava moved slowly down the slopes, one mile-wide stream extending thirteen miles down the volcano's north side to within twenty-five miles of Hilo.

The speed of the liquid rivers diminished to-day on contact with more level ground.

The molten streams threatened a desolate country between two big ranches. Nothing could yet be told as to its final course, but if it con-

Break Opposed By Nanking

Government Takes Measures Against "Autonomy" For North China

Associated Press

Nanking, Nov. 23.—The official central news agency announced to-day the Foreign Office had sent notice to Chinese embassies and legations abroad that the central Nationalist Government would not sanction the north China autonomy movement and was planning measures to meet the campaign for north China secession.

Peiping, Nov. 23 (Canadian Press from Havas).—Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, British financial expert, indicated to-day he did not approve of Japan's policy of promoting separation of the northern provinces from China.

Financial separation would be disastrous, he said.

Shanghai, Nov. 23 (Associated Press)—A spokesman for the Japanese Embassy, said to-day: "We are interestedly awaiting Chiang Kai-shek's response to the northern desire for autonomy."

"An order giving northern commanders increased powers to work out their own self-government methods might satisfy the autonomy leaders, but we would not tolerate any meddling not in the best interests of the northern people," he asserted.

BIG BATTLE SOON IN ETHIOPIA

Canadian Press from Havas

Addis Ababa, Nov. 23.—A great and decisive battle will shortly take place between the Ethiopian and Italian forces, Emperor Haile Selassie declared to-day.

"The Italian war communiques," he said in an interview, "in no way correspond to reality, but the Ethiopian government considers it superfluous to comment on them. An elementary knowledge of the political and military situation is enough to show their inaccuracy."

GARDINER STILL TO CHOOSE RIDING

Canadian Press

Regina, Nov. 23.—With the question of what constituency he will represent in Parliament still undecided, Hon. J. G. Gardiner, federal Minister of Agriculture, is scheduled to leave for Ottawa this evening.

Mussolini's Ambassador To France Says New Sanction Would Be Fought

Premier Laval Reported Opposed to Oil Embargo Under League; Oil Shipments Held Back From U.S.; Rome Newspaper Article Says Sanctions Will Lead to Reshuffling of Political and Military Alliances in Europe

Associated Press

Paris, Nov. 23—A warning that an oil embargo against Italy "would mean war" was reported unofficially to-day to have been given Premier Pierre Laval by Italian Ambassador Vittorio Cerruti.

Genevieve Taboius, a commentator close to government circles, said the newspaper L'Oeuvre that Premier Mussolini's representative delivered the warning in a talk yesterday with M. Laval.

Premier Laval was described in usually well informed quarters as being opposed to an oil embargo, fearing it would heighten diplomatic tension in Rome and other capitals with danger that Il Duce's irritation would dash all hopes of settlement of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict.

Ambassador Cerruti visited Premier Laval again this morning, but officials said there was "nothing new" arising in their conference and that the Italian diplomat was merely keeping in contact with the Premier.

STANDS ALOOF

Officials indicated France would avoid involving herself in the question of an embargo on oil and coal since her only oil interests are at Mosul, which is controlled by the British, while France's coal production is insufficient for her own needs.

France is thinking of her own supplies of war materials. The subcommittee for national defence of the Chamber of Deputies discussed this problem, certain members declaring France is producing only two tons of magnesium to every eight tons produced in Germany.

ETHIOPIANS RETAKE TOWN

Canadian Press-Reuter's

Harar, Ethiopia, Nov. 23.—Unofficial reports received here to-day said Ethiopians had retaken the fortified town of Gorrahei, which the Italians captured some time ago.

Reliable information indicated Italian Somaliland troops had mutinied, killing thirty Italians.

Gorrahei is in Ogaden province, southeastern Ethiopia, about 150 miles south of Daggah Bur, which the Italians are reported to have reached in their advance from the south toward Harar, Diredawa and Jijiga in eastern Ethiopia.

Associated Press

Asmara, Eritrea, Nov. 23.—Ethiopian troops under Degiac Ayelu Burru, governor of Northern Amhara, were driven back to-day by Italian forces when they attempted to penetrate Italian-occupied territory.

The losses were not announced, but authorities said they believed the Ethiopians suffered heavily because they were caught attempting a difficult crossing of the Takkaze River, where the Italians had lined the northern bank with machine guns.

Italian occupation of the Takkaze sector, west of Makale, had driven the Ethiopians under Degiac Burru into a frenzy because the Italian troops prevented them from reaching the river and obtaining water.

Burru has maintained a small force constantly near the river in hope of making a surprise crossing, but Italian vigilance has been unrelenting.

The Italian troops of the Second Army Corps who engaged in the Takkaze encounter consisted mostly of irregular bands, about half of whom were formerly with Ethiopian forces.

Power Project Is Considered

B.C. Electric to Survey Loss Creek With View to Establishing Subsidiary Plant

Possible development of a new power plant at Loss Creek, near Jordan River, was foreshadowed in an announcement by George M. Tripp, general superintendent of the British Columbia Electric Railway Company that, provided no objections were filed, his department would undertake a survey of that waterway next spring.

The survey, together with the future demand for greater power, would largely determine the extent to which development would be carried, Mr. Tripp stated to-day.

At present he was unable to say what use, if any, would be made of the creek, but indicated present suggestions regarded the project as a subsidiary to the main plant at Jordan River.

APPLICATION MADE

According to notices published in the press, the Vancouver Island Power Company Limited, a subsidiary of the B.C. Electric, has applied to the government for a license to take and use 140 cubic second feet and to store 14,000 acre feet of water out of Loss Creek, also known as Lost Creek, which flows westerly and drains into the Straits of Juan de Fuca about fourteen miles westerly from Jordan River P.O.

The water will be diverted from the stream at a point about Fourteen-mile Post, Jordan River, Port Renfrew

Big Task For New Secretary

M. MacDonald as Dominions Minister to Negotiate For Britain With Irish Free State

By GEORGE HAMBLETON, Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Nov. 23. — Malcolm MacDonald's promotion to be Dominions Secretary in Prime Minister Baldwin's reshuffled cabinet, replacing Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, who goes to the Colonial Office, drew considerable comment in the British press to-day.

"The transfer between the Dominions office and the Colonial office," said The London Times, "is wise in itself and should mean an enlargement of experience to both men."

"As for the exchange of offices between Mr. Thomas and Malcolm MacDonald," commented The London Post, "it must be assumed there are reasons for it, although it is impossible to forget Malcolm MacDonald has had but short experience of office, and that the Secretary of State for the Dominions holds one of the most important cabinet posts. Lincoln Ellsworth and Pilot Hollick-Kenyon Make Third Start Over Antarctica

Associated Press

New York, Nov. 23.—The New York Times and the North American Newspaper Alliance said that Lincoln Ellsworth today hopped off on his third attempt to span the Antarctic continent.

The weather at Dundee Island in the Weddell Sea suddenly turned favorable shortly before the take-off. The plane was piloted by Herbert Hollick-Kenyon of Winnipeg.

Ellsworth was forced to run back on his first attempt because of a broken fuel line. On the second he reported the discovery of an 11,000-foot mountain chain.

The route chosen by Ellsworth, from the Weddell Sea to the Ross Sea, lies across the South Pole. Ellsworth said they expected to fly the 2,140 miles in about fourteen hours.

The cabinet crisis had been brewing for some time and had been made particularly acute by the recent resignation of Marco Riaskov, Minister of Finance.

Political tension in Bulgaria has not relaxed since exposure of the plot two months ago against the life of King Boris in which high army officers and former cabinet members were involved.

Berlin Talk Is Rapped in Paris

Canadian Press From Havas

Paris, Nov. 23.—Right-wing French Nationalist opinion has reacted with sharp hostility to any Franco-German rapprochement, such as that heralded by the two-hour conference between Ambassador Andre Francois-Poncet and Chancellor Hitler in Berlin on Thursday.

"Pertinax," leading Conservative writer, in the Echo de Paris gave a strongly-worded warning against any agreement with Germany.

The communique issued after the Berlin meeting he characterized as "a specious document likely to lead parliamentary and public opinion astray." It had referred to the "friendly spirit" and "goodwill" between the two countries.

Germany's willingness to engage in talks of this kind with France was attributed by L'Oeuvre to the Reich's

Associated Press

Singapore, Straits Settlements, Nov. 23.—Reports that footprints were seen in sand on Sayer Island, off the west coast of Siam, brought fresh hopes to-day the missing Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith might still be alive.

Capt. Husney, pilot of a plane which flew over that area after a steamship master had reported seeing flares rising from the island in the Bay of Bengal, where Kingsford-Smith and Tom Pethybridge, co-pilot, were last seen on a projected flight from England to Australia, said:

"I searched all six Sayer Islands and am certain there was nothing on four of them, but I cannot be sure about the others, which were covered with jungle growth.

GLORIES OF PEIPING BEING RESTORED

Temples and Other Buildings Being Repaired; Streets Are Paved

Canadian Press

Peiping, China, Nov. 23.—An army of thousands of skilled workmen is busy restoring the ancient glories of this city which, as Peking, was the capital of imperial China. A fund of $3,000,000,000 Mexican ($1,000,000 Canadian) has been assured and tile setters, wood carvers, marble sculptors, painters and carpenters are busy on what will be a three-year labor of restoring the city to the beauty it was noted for under the reign of the emperors.

High bamboo scaffoldings surround a number of famous buildings and memorial structures which are being rescued from decay and some twenty-five miles of streets are being graded and paved to permit easy access to visitors.

The famous Temple of Heaven has been reroofed with new tile, and the been reroofed with new tiles, and the Altar of Heaven, made with white tile, has been completely rebuilt, stone by stone, from the original materials. Carved dragons and phoenix birds, chipped by tourists and soldier vandals, are being sculptured anew.

IN FORBIDDEN CITY

Repair work is being carried out in the Forbidden City on the temples on Coal Hill and hundreds of workmen are restoring the Ming Tombs, fifteen miles outside the city. Before 1938, the Temple of Confucius, the jade fountains and the Hall of Classics and the Lama Temple will have been renovated.

Many Chinese newspapers voiced suspicion that the restoration work was being done in preparation for the annexation of north China to Manchukuo and the return of the ex-emperor, Pu Yi, to the throne of his ancestors in Peiping. Pu Yi has been set up on the throne of Manchukuo.

An investigation, however, revealed the renovation work is being carried out by the Nanking ministry of finance, the ministry of railways and the municipal government of Peiping.

BROADCAST SPONSORS

Sponsors for the broadcasts are announced by the committee as follows: December 9, the City of Victoria; December 10, Home Oil Company; December 11, David Spencer Ltd.; December 12, Mallek's; December 13, Rotary Club; December 16, United Commercial Travelers; December 17, Hudson's Bay Company; December 18, Civil Servants' Sports Association; December 19, British America Paint Company, and December 20, B.C. Electric Railway Company.

To cope with the huge crowds which last year stormed the CFCT studios during the broadcasts of the appeal programmes, the microphone will be transferred to the Chamber of Commerce auditorium for all broadcasts, except that by the Home Gas Optimists. Victorians will thus be able to witness in comfort the performances staged by the different sponsors.

Although the headquarters on Yates Street do not open until the second day of next month, members of the radio committee and of the club will be glad to accept any contributions before that date.

The registration and credentials' committee is already actively at work. It is composed of Mrs. R. Felton, Mrs. Alec D. Straith, Mrs. R. Pickard and Mrs. E. G. Snowden. Already the names of 700 families are under consideration.

Last year the Gyro Club sent out a total of 1,508 hampers to needy families in the city, containing a total of forty-five tons of provisions of all sorts needed to bring happiness into homes which would otherwise have faced a grey Christmas season.

Many Witnesses At Riot Inquiry Called in Regina

man of the commission, "you might as well ask who are all the officials of the United Church as it was represented on the committee."

The question was pressed by B. D. Hogarth, K.C., counsel for the federal government and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

MEETINGS REPORTED

Mr. Bee was the first witness called by Frank J. G. Cunningham, counsel for the strikers. He read at length minutes he had taken of meetings of the citizens' emergency committee between June 13 and June 28, which he took as secretary.

His evidence revealed how Regina organizations grouped together as the emergency committee just before arrival of the On-to-Ottawa trek in June, "to facilitate departure of the trekkers from Regina." The committee held meetings, Mr. Bee said, daily, and handled many details concerning the three-week stopover of trekkers. It contained representation of twenty-four organizations the day it was formed, and thirty-one organizations the next day.

It continues in existence as the citizens' defence committee.

BODIES REPRESENTED

Representation included the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, the Communist Party, Trades and Labor Council, unemployed associations, Milk Drivers' Union, the United Action Committee, Local Council of Women, United Church of Canada, League Against War and Fascism, Labor Defence League and others.

As far as Mr. Bee recalled, it was "just called together."

Mr. Bee said the United Action Committee was formed of three members from the Communist Party and three from the C.C.F. last May "to discuss economic action." Mr. Bee himself represented this committee in the emergency organization as a member of the C.C.F.

Asked by G. H. Yule, K.C., counsel of the commission, why it was called an "emergency" committee, Mr. Bee replied the arrival of the strikers was considered an emergency situation. The committee did not know at first the men would not be allowed to proceed eastward from Regina.

GATHERED PROVISIONS

Matters handled by the committee, Mr. Bee stated, included arrangements for a mass meeting on the trek, provisions for the men, tag days, lapel buttons to be sold in aid of the men, picnics and other entertainment, negotiations with authorities on means to send the trek on its way, sending of telegrams to Ottawa protesting police blockade of the trek, and the massing of public opinion in support of the strikers.

The emergency committee members also were ready to lead a strikers' parade and to give the men a "send-off" on the railways.

CLUBS DISPLAYED

At yesterday afternoon's session of the inquiry, more sticks and clubs were introduced as evidence, on identification by R.C.M.P. Constable Donald F. Wink as articles seized at the stadium after the strikers had left.

WALL OF FLAME

This correspondent flew over the volcano yesterday in a navy airplane, and a wall of solid flame, 500 feet wide, 1,000 feet long and 200 feet thick could be seen burning fiercely in the crater a mile away. Fiery fountains played within the crater, while not far away snow covered a large area of the mountain top.

Dr. Jaggar said he was unable to tell how long nature's spectacular show would continue, but said "eruptions during the twentieth century usually don't last more than three weeks. Nineteenth century eruptions in this region lasted a year."

The volcanologist said the Halemaumau crater of the Kilauea volcano, about fifteen miles east, was not active, but there was nothing to prevent it from erupting from the force of Mauna Loa's activity.

ETHIOPIANS RETAKE TOWN

Associated Press

Rome, Nov. 23.—The entire Ogaden region of Ethiopia, with all its population, was announced by the government to-day to have come completely under Italian control.

The Ethiopian chieftains of the southern province made their acts of submission gradually, an official Italian spokesman said, while Gen. Rudolfo Graziani conducted the campaign out of Italian Somaliland.

The spokesman said Italy now has full command of the Ogaden area of 100,000 square miles with a population of 80,000.

From the population, he said 5,000 warriors have been recruited and are now with the Italian forces.

"DARK HORSE" COLUMN

Rome, Nov. 23.—Italian armies invading Ethiopia disclosed a "dark-horse" column to-day—a hitherto unpublicized force reported marching across the barren Danakil desert from Assab, Eritrea, to attack Dessie.

Fascist war correspondents said the column left Assab, southernmost coastal point of Italy's east African colony of Eritrea, a few days ago and was nearing Tiradud in the angle between the Eritrean and French Somaliland borders.

Capture of the vital centre of Dessie would establish the Italian force mid-way between Makale on the north and Harar on the south.

From that position, the column could strike in either direction, to aid the northern army in its march from Makale or to hit at the back of the Harar-Jijiga-Diredawa region, menaced from the front by the southern Ethiopian army.

REFUGEES BOMBED

Addis Ababa, Nov. 23.—The Ethiopian Government stated in an official communique to-day that many civilian refugees fleeing from northern towns in an attempt to reach the Ethiopian lines had been bombed by Italian airplanes.

"Two hundred refugees fleeing from Sekota, Debre Tsion, and Haouasen," said the communique, "reached our lines yesterday and in miserable condition. They said their grain and cattle were seized by the Italians without recompense or consideration for the native requirements.

"Many women and children died of hunger or were slain by machine guns.

"Because the Italian soldiers are violating women of all ages, the populations of the occupied territories are fleeing under the leadership of priests."

Canadian Press from Havas

Addis Ababa, Nov. 23.—Crown Prince Asfavu Wassan Tafari, eldest son of Emperor Haile Selassie, is in excellent health, official quarters here announced to-day, denying reports published abroad that he had been killed or injured in an airplane flight from the capital.

The Crown Prince was engaged at the palace to-day in a survey of the civil duties he must undertake when his father, the Emperor, goes to the northern front with his armies.

Officials described the Italian tactics in the south as "timid and unaggressive," with their planes flying at a 4,000-foot altitude and their aviators taking no chances.

Natives of the capital massed in front of the palace to-day to inspect seven captured Italian machine guns placed there as evidence of the success of Ethiopian warriors.

Road Survey, and will be used for power purposes, the notice stated.

"Objections to the application or petition may be filed with the water recorded or with the comptroller of water rights, Parliament Buildings, within thirty days after the first appearance of this notice in a local newspaper," the statement said.

The notice was first published on October 17.

NO OBSTACLE

"There do not appear at the present moment to be any obstacles," J. C. Macdonald, Comptroller of Water Rights, stated when questioned today.

Explaining the notice, Mr. Tripp stated it was necessary to get permission from the government to make a survey.

"If that permission is granted we will start surveys next spring, possibly at the end of April or the beginning of May," Mr. Trip said.

"We do not know what there is in the way of water power but at present our considerations are being based on the idea the Loss Creek project, if satisfactory, would be subsidiary to the Jordan River plant."

"We are looking after possible future requirements. It takes years to survey and develop water power," he added.

ADEQUATE AT PRESENT

Asked if Jordan River had ever proved inadequate to carry the load, Mr. Tripp said the auxiliary steam plant at Brentwood had only been called into operation once in the last ten years to supplement the supply when exceptionally dry weather had caused a shortage of water at the main plant.

Possible development at Loss Creek would depend largely on demand, Mr. Tripp added, but said that demand could not be established definitely owing to the uncertainty over industrial developments requiring electricity in Victoria.

NOT AFFECTED BY FRANCHISE

Any action would not be affected by the company's franchise with the city, he said.

If the survey at Loss Creek proved it unsuitable for development, the company would look for other water power sites.

"Naturally, for the benefit of the consumers, we would rather have cheap water power than go to steam," Mr. Tripp declared.

Loss Creek has been under consideration for the last three years. The application for license would cover use of water to generate 1,300 horsepower only, whereas the Jordan River plant produces 35,000 horsepower.

However, if Loss Creek furnished greater power than expected, the company would not necessarily limit itself to the minimum, Mr. Tripp stated.

inability to keep up its present pace of building armaments.

Germany requires a large loan, the paper added, and wants to get it from London. "The Reich understands it will be obtained only as a result of a relaxation in international tension and in a better agreement with France."

Canadian Press from Havas

Berlin, Nov. 23.—The semi-official newspaper Politische und Diplomatische Korrespondenz declared yesterday evening no further concrete obstacles remained on the road to friendship and understanding between France and Germany.

Similar sentiments were expressed by other papers commenting on Thursday's conversation between Chancellor Hitler and French Ambassador Francois-Poncet as inaugurating a new era of Franco-German amity.

"The French people may be assured," declared the Foreign Office publication, "that Germany wants nothing to conflict with legitimate interests of France.

"Germany's love of peace and her desire for a general understanding were freely offered and put to the test. These desires cannot be linked with anything that would prevent sincere collaboration. Germany simply asserts, as her natural right, the same liberty and independence which all other peoples wish or enjoy."

The following account of the first seven hours' flight of the China Clipper from Alameda to Honolulu was written at 11 o'clock last night, P.S.T., for the Associated Press by Capt. R. O. D. Sullivan, second in command aboard the big four-motored plane.

Aboard the China Clipper, En Route to Honolulu, Nov. 23.—I have just relinquished the controls to Captain Musick.

We are seven hours out of Alameda, boring into a black void far above an invisible Pacific Ocean. Navigation Officer Noonan has just completed a celestial fix. (Observation of stars to obtain position). He reports we are 823 miles out.

We are making a good course south, bearing on the under side of a high pressure area and seeking a reduced head wind, which has been beating constantly on our bow at twenty miles an hour.

Soon after leaving the Golden Gate we started six hours of tunnel-like cruising. There was a solid ceiling above and a solid floor of clouds beneath us.

As we entered that "tunnel," the clouds shut out a vivid sunset. It was grey and finally became totally black.

THOUSANDS OF STARS

It was when we emerged from the "tunnel" that Noonan got his fix. Now the sky above is a canopy dotted with myriad brilliant stars. Nothing outside save the stars is visible.

Inside, capped and coated forms bend over instruments. The men step quickly, automatically about in this great ship, too busy yet to fully realize the significance of this flight, which was undertaken only after eight exploratory crossings by the little clipper had carefully prepared every inch of the way.

Oil Embargo Would Mean War, Says Italy

the shipment of oil to Italy if the League decides on it.

Canadian Press from Havas

Rome, Nov. 23.—A plain warning enforcement of sanctions must lead to a reshuffling of political and military alliances in Europe was made to-day in an unsigned article in The Popolo d'Italia, the authorship of which was directly attributed in informed circles to Premier Benito Mussolini.

Addressing the sanctionist powers, the article said: "You cannot add cruel injustice to the ingratitude of Versailles without compromising future collaboration in Europe.

"Italy, a young nation of 44,000,000, will exercise decisive weight in the future and cannot be destroyed or neglected."

COTTON SUPPLIES

Washington, Nov. 23.—Secretary of State Hull to-day intimated the United States might try to prevent cotton sales to the Italo-Ethiopian war zone if that step becomes necessary.

Exactly how trading in that commodity, essential to a warring nation, could be restricted, the Secretary of State did not say. But Mr. Hull already had issued an unofficial list of "war materials" including oil, copper, scrap iron and steel, trucks and tractors. Cotton was not on it. Some thought, therefore, cotton might be included in that list.

The embargo proclaimed by President Roosevelt November 5 applies only to actual arms and munitions. Asked whether he considered cotton essential to war, he reiterated any question relating to what constitutes prime, essential and immediate war materials shipped in abnormal quantities would be given attention.

SHIPS HELD IN PORT

Washington, Nov. 23.—An implied threat to tighten the federal purse strings has held in port a number of United States ships which would have carried war materials to the Italo-Ethiopian war zone.

Officials close to the President, and who preferred not to be quoted, made this known.

J. C. Peacock, director of the Shipping Board and president of the federally controled Merchant Fleet Corporation, confirmed openly, however, that letters had been sent to steamship operators and owners who owe the government money reminding them that the shipment of raw materials to Italy and Ethiopia is contrary to the government's policy.

How many ships had remained in port, their names, or other information about them was not immediately available.

It was said a number of the ships were oil tankers.

By ALBERT M. WILSON
Associated Press Foreign Staff

Addis Ababa, Nov. 23.—Ethiopian officials to-day, expressed jubilation over the United States government's appeal to halt oil shipments to Italy and Ethiopia, saying that, if it is observed, it will be the most serious blow that could be dealt Premier Mussolini.

The officials said they did not believe Italy had as yet been able to accumulate large stores of gasoline and lubricating oil, although travelers from Khartum stated the Greek merchants there were making fortunes from shipping oil in truck caravans to Eritrea from the Sudan and that they were receiving cash on delivery.

PLEASED AT SHIP WARNING

Ethiopian authorities also declared they were pleased with the United States Shipping Board warning on the grounds that it will be much harder for Italy since Ethiopia does not want raw material but only arms and ammunition.

NEW GOVERNOR AT MONTREAL

At the city hall Mayor Houde extended an official civic greeting and assured His Majesty's representative of the continuing homage and loyalty of French-Canada to the King.

Lord Tweedsmuir replied briefly, expressing with feeling his appreciation of the kind reception of the city and people of Montreal, many of whom lined the streets and cheered the party along the route.

ADDRESSES CLUB

To members of the Canadian Club the Governor-General said these were times when everyone was attempting to strain his eyes into the mist to see if he could observe better weather ahead. It was a great chance for prophets, who generally were clever people. It was a remarkable fact, however,—"and I might call my topic the stupidity of the clever"—that the very clever people were nearly always wrong. It was the plain man who was far more often right. He instanced many cases to confirm his assertions.

"What is the reason, I wonder, why these very clever people have been so consistently blind?" he asked. "The only explanation I can give is a simple one, what Senancour called "Le vulgaire des sages"—The folly of the wise.

"The plain man, on the other hand, is not intellectual, but he has a curiously sound instinct. He is not too logical, just because he is close to real life, about what things are actually going to happen. This is just where the plain man scores."

From these brief remarks, said Lord Tweedsmuir was to be drawn the moral: Never distrust the instinct and judgment of the ordinary man.

From the Canadian Club the Governor-General and retinue were taken to McGill University, where an honorary degree of doctor of laws was conferred on Baron Tweedsmuir.

Big Task For New Secretary

The Manchester Guardian declares: "Mr. Baldwin cannot be congratulated on his cabinet reshuffle. He has not got rid of Mr. Thomas, although he has moved him down a few steps in the hierarchy of secretaries of state. . . . The case against Mr. Thomas is that he has been unable to solve the dispute with the Irish Free State and has not earned the respect of the Dominions . . .

"If Mr. MacDonald is able," The Guardian concludes, "to show himself of big enough mould to handle the Irish problem, his transfer to the Dominions office might be welcomed, but he has still to give proof of outstanding capacity."

IN OFFICE FIVE MONTHS

Malcolm MacDonald, thirty-four-year-old son of former Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, has been in the cabinet since June as Colonial Secretary.

At the Dominion Office Mr. MacDonald now replaces Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, who has held the same portfolio since 1930 — longer than any other member of the present government.

IRISH PROBLEM

Political observers believed the change of office meant Prime Minister Baldwin planned renewed efforts to settle Anglo-Irish points of controversy. Mr. Thomas takes over the Colonial secretaryship vacated by the younger MacDonald.

These observers said Mr. Thomas had adopted a stiff and unyielding attitude in negotiations with De Valera and that the relations of the two had never been cordial. From the standpoint of the Irish Free State, Mr. Thomas has been considered the "bogeyman" of the Anglo-Irish situation.

Malcolm MacDonald was regarded as fitted for the Dominions post on several counts. He was under-secretary in the Dominions office prior to becoming Colonial Secretary last June. He attended the Ottawa Economic Conference in 1932 and performed valuable work there. Also he was popularly received in a recent trip to Australia, where he acquired useful background.

LIMITS SET BY FIREMEN

Canadian Press

Halifax, Nov. 23. — All Halifax wondered to-day what would happen if fire broke out in government property here.

The speculation centred around a decree of Alderman W. A. Gates, chairman of the firewardens' committee, forbidding firemen to attend fires anywhere in the millions of dollars' worth of government buildings and port facilities here.

Neither the provincial nor federal government was paying the city for protection, Alderman Gates contended, and they were not going to get it. He excepted only government hospitals, including Camp Hill, which houses disabled war veterans.

Man Accused Of Package Racket

C. Schieland Held at New York; Socially Prominent Persons Lost Money

Associated Press

New York, Nov. 23.—Carl Schieland Jr., accused by federal agents of perpetrating a "package racket" hoax on persons socially prominent here and in Washington, was in the federal house of detention to-day awaiting grand jury action. He was held in $2,500 bail.

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said Schieland signed a statement admitting he had sought to obtain sums of money from his victims on a pretence he was bringing them packages from friends in foreign lands. The packages never were delivered. The money provided for customs fees allegedly was pocketed by Schieland.

OLD SCHEME

"It's an old racket we thought went out of existence some years ago," one federal agent here said. "It takes gullible persons or someone of high-pressure sales ability to put it across."

Among the victims were Dr. William Darrach, dean emeritus of the Columbia Medical School; James Caldwell, a New York attorney; Mrs. James Duke of Newport, R.I.; Benjamin Cohen, of the Chilean embassy, and several Washington lawyers.

A native of Orange, N.J., Schieland was a messenger at the Hoboken piers during the Great War, and later worked on steamships as a bus boy. He went to Honolulu in 1931 and there married Elfretha Drager of Moose Jaw, Sask., who was employed there. She left him in 1933 and he prospected for gold in the Philippine Islands, the federal records show. Then he came back to the United States and began to ply the package fraud, the Federal Bureau of Investigation said.

A. KENT MARTIN DIES IN TACOMA

Associated Press

Tacoma, Wash., Nov. 23. — Albert Kent Martin, fifty-five, prominent Tacoma lumberman, and vice-president of the Pacific National Lumber Company since 1915, died here yesterday evening as the result of injuries received three weeks ago in an auto accident on the Mountain Highway.

Before moving to Tacoma from Chehalis in 1915, Mr. Martin had held executive positions with lumber companies in his father's plant at Des Moines, Iowa, and in Minneapolis, Kent and Chehalis.

The rehearsals of this production, under the able direction of Mrs. Ruth Valiant, has already assured the branch of a successful undertaking. Many members of the cast took part in last year's play, "The Passing of The Third Floor Back," but a few new members will make their initial debut.

The story centres around an adopted child, "Charlie," who is portrayed by Miss Noreen Creelman. The part of "Charlie's" ward is acted by Jack Laver. Aunty Fanny, lady of the house, is ably taken by Miss Kay Smith. Her guests are: Mrs. Smythe Kersey, Vivian and Mortimer Smythe Kersey, played by Misses Sylvia Schofield, Clarenda Jeeves and Stan Cooper, respectively.

Nora Malona, the Irish maid, who provides many a laugh, is taken by Miss Iris Smith. Her sweetheart, an Irish policeman, is played by Bill Creelman. Theodore, a pal of Larry Eliot's, is the part of John Hooper.

First Prize For Alberta Wheat

H. P. Wright Wins Championship of Canada at Toronto Winter Fair

Canadian Press

Toronto, Nov. 23.—One of the happiest persons at the Royal Winter Fair here to-day was Howard P. Wright of Airdrie, north of Calgary. When he arrived from the prairies yesterday he found his wheat entry had captured the championship in competition with wheat from all over Canada.

His exhibit, hard red wheat known as Red Bobs 222, was awarded a handsome silver cup. Mr. Wright explained the sample of grain which won the award was taken from a representative sample of fifty bushels on his farm and weighed sixty-nine pounds to the bushel.

It is his first visit to the Royal Winter Fair.

Mr. Wright was born in Guelph, Ont., but moved west in 1911. He has been on his present farm seventeen years and specializes in seed production, mainly seed wheat.

"Naturally I am greatly pleased to win the award," said Mr. Wright, "but the boys back on the farm will be just as pleased as I am."

Ferguson May Go Into Politics

But Ex-High Commissioner to Britain Not Yet Sure of Plans in Canada

London, Nov. 23.—"At present I cannot say anything about it," declared Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, former Canadian High Commissioner to Great Britain, commenting on rumors he would soon re-enter the political arena.

"I hope first to have a bit of a rest," he added, intimating he would return to Canada about Christmas.

Mr. Ferguson has just relinquished his duties to Hon. Vincent Massey, newly-appointed High Commissioner, who arrived in London, November 13. Premier of Ontario for seven years, Mr. Ferguson left Toronto in 1930 to take the High Commissionership, where he could not participate in politics.

It has also been rumored here Mr. Ferguson would remain in England indefinitely, but he told the Canadian Press he would stay in London until Christmas only to complete unfinished business and take a rest.

OCTOBER SETS BABY RECORD

Thirty-seven babies, a monthly record for the institution, were born at the Jubilee Hospital in October, it was announced to-day by Dr. T. W. Walker, medical superintendent, following the regular meeting of the hospital directors yesterday evening.

Never before in the annals of the hospital have that many children been brought into the world in one month.

Another record was established during October when the institution housed an average of 271 patients per day. Previously the highest daily average for any month had been 265.

HOSPITAL DAYS

The total patient days for October was registered at 8,392, an increase of 1,679 hospital days over the same month in 1934. A year ago the daily average was 216.

Dr. Walker reported a supply of radium which doubled the existing amount had been received and would add greatly to the efficiency of that department.

The board ordered the purchase of a General Electric shortwave inductotherm for medical application of diathermy.

J. L. Lewis Quits Labor Federation

Washington, Nov. 23. — John L. Lewis, international president of the United Mine Workers of America, resigned to-day as vice-president of the American Federation of Labor.

Lewis announced his resignation in a brief letter to William Green, president of the federation.

His resignation came as a surprise, and brought forward again the long-standing conflict between Lewis and Green over two opposed theories of labor organization. Lewis had supported organization of unions by industries, the "vertical" type, while Green held to the long-established "horizontal" union by crafts.

The recent federation convention at Atlantic City, N.J., resulted in a vote adverse to Lewis in his effort to have the organization rebuilt along industrial unionization lines. The conflict was so hot that he participated in a fist fight with one of the opponents of his proposals.

AUDITORIUM BIDS TABLED

The Victoria School Board yesterday evening tabled tenders from Luney Brothers Limited, Parfitt Brothers Limited and Williams, Tresise and Williams, for the Oaklands auditorium and decided to appoint a special committee to take the matter of costs up with the City Council as soon as possible.

Without setting any definite sum for the work, the council had let the school board know it intended to earmark $6,000 of the $100,000 provincial loan for that project.

After Trustee P. E. George, acting chairman in the absence of W. C. Moresby, had read the three tenders, Trustee T. B. Monk, chairman of the finance committee, noted the three bids were just about 100 per cent higher than the sum the board had been promised for the work.

WOULD END NEGOTIATIONS

"In view of these figures, I move we do not go ahead with the work," he said.

Trustee Kenneth Ferguson felt his motion was a bit too strong.

When it received no seconder, Trustee W. T. Straith moved the board approach the City Council and ask the latter body to meet a committee from the school board on the matter.

His motion was finally passed and the building and grounds committee, composed of Trustees P. E. George, Charles Bishop and Kenneth Ferguson, together with George H. Deane, municipal inspector, and R. H. McInnes, principal of Oaklands school, were named to the group which will meet the council.

In explanation of the tenders, C. Elwood Watkins, architect, stated they covered the complete work required for the new auditorium, with the exception of wiring and lighting and flooring the basement.

SOMETHING WRONG

"There seems to me to be something radically wrong in this matter," Trustee Monk stated. "We were informed it would cost about $7,500 and now it is about $12,000. I think there is something cockeyed somewhere," he said.

Mr. Watkins explained the tenders covered the complete work. Nothing had been left out and no extras had been added, he said. There was nothing that could be eliminated from the building plans, he said, before explaining the need for strong support for the auditorium floor. If the basement were not constructed, the price would not be quite so high, but the elimination of a basement would not cause a cut of more than $2,000, he said in reply to question.

Trustee Monk again expressed the opinion the plan should be shelved for the present and taken up again when funds were available for a good job to be done.

The board then tabled the tenders, details of which were not made public, at the request of the board, and the special committee to meet the council was named.

RELIEF STRIKE LEADS TO CLASH

Canadian Press

Toronto, Nov. 23.—One constable suffered cuts about the head yesterday when East York township unemployed climaxed a three-weeks' strike by storming the municipal offices on the outskirts of Toronto and taking possession of the building.

Constable Harry Smith was given hospital treatment following the smashing of a window in the township office. More than forty special constables from nearby municipalities were hurried to the scene and there was a brief flare-up when the police tried to clear the building.

MME. STAVISKY WEEPS AT TRIAL

Associated Press

Paris, Nov. 23.—Madame Arlette Simon Stavisky, one-time mannequin, wept as she was led from the witness stand at the Stavisky fraud trial yesterday.

The smartly-clad widow of Serge Stavisky, alleged swindler who was found dead in an Alpine hideaway, admitted living luxuriously with her husband. She broke down when defence attorneys asked her to tell the story of her last meeting with Stavisky.

MIDWAY AT FAIR CLOSED

Ontario Attorney-General Objects to Gambling at Toronto Winter Event

Canadian Press

Toronto, Nov. 23.—The entire midway at the Royal Winter Fair stood closed to-day, Crown Attorney J. A. McFadden having given an order yesterday as the latest move on the part of the Ontario Government to strangle games of chance, especially slot machines.

The order, delivered on instructions of Attorney-General Arthur W. Roebuck, embraced not only chance games and slot machines, but affected nearly a dozen other games, including a "Bingo" game and wheels of fortune. Within a few minutes, the entire midway sector of the big fair was shut up.

R. H. Greer, K.C., the operators' solicitor, went into conference with police and fair officials, quoting the Criminal Code to support his advice to the operator that the crown could not prove a case against the games. The concessionaire said he had "over $50,000 worth of equipment which will not be loaded into trucks and carted away, if I can avoid it."

Police said that as long as the midway remained closed they would take no action against the operator. Should he reopen, they would take all gaming equipment away.

BAN NEXT YEAR

Earlier in the day, Hon. Duncan Marshall, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, had said a ban would be placed on the gaming devices at fairs next year on threat of a government grant cancellation, despite enabling terms in the Criminal Code. He said the ban would be efective on both small and large fairs which received government grants.

WHAT ABOUT THE GIRL you left behind you?

WASHING SERVICE

49c for 10 lbs. Damp Ready to Iron and 5c for each additional pound

ANSWER this, Mr. Husband. Do you ever boast to your friends—to the men in the office—that your wife is a fine washwoman? YOU KNOW YOU DON'T. Just the thought of her down in the basement slaving away over those dirty clothes makes you blush for shame. Makes you wish (almost) that you could live in a bathing suit. But you don't have to go as far as that. You can put a stop to washday. You can make her stop wasting her strength and her looks and her youth away by simply calling us. Order our Washing Service, we'll do the rest. And your wife can take a rest every washday.

Prove to your wife that you love her — that you want to save her looks and youth—by calling the laundry, now

G8166

Go home to-night and make the announcement that there'll be no more washdays in your home. Tell your wife we're going to take all that wearing, tiring, aging work off her hands. Tell her, too, we'll wash everything beautifully clean, with as much care as she would herself. Tell her we use gallons and gallons of sparkling clear, rain-soft rinse water and send the clothes home clean through and through and all ready to iron. And best of all, tell her with our Washing Service she can have the washing done for less than it's costing her to do it herself.

Think of the girl you left behind you. Think of her health and happiness. Put a stop to her washday drudgery by phoning and telling us to call for the bundle. It will be the grandest thing in the world for her —and for you, too.

A GOOD INVESTMENT

ABOUT THE END OF NEXT WEEK tenders will be called for a new T.B. wing to be erected on a site close to the Vancouver General Hospital. Hon. F. M. MacPherson, Minister of Public Works in the Pattullo government, announced yesterday that plans for the new structure had been completed and that minor details in connection with the equipment were under consideration. The expenditure on the building is expected to be about $175,000—one of the largest building contracts to be offered by the provincial government this season.

It is gratifying to know that the provincial government, many public and semi-public organizations, are realizing at long last that the "great white plague" must be fought, that it can not be considered something that can be forgotten, something that can cure itself. Only those, for example, the members of the Tuberculous Veterans of the Canadian Legion, who have suffered from this pulmonary disease—others who have had to grin and bear its exactions on the human frame—understand its ravages, what every bit that is done to get it under control means.

British Columbia is losing between 400 and 500 citizens a year as a result of tuberculosis. The reason for this is that there is by no means sufficient institutional treatment available to deal with incipient cases—cases which, if that treatment were available, could have the ailment arrested and be given a chance to get well.

As we have said many times in these columns, tuberculosis is taking too great a life toll of our population. We have said, too, that the human asset is the nation's most valuable asset. To help to preserve that asset "a few more beds" in Vancouver is an excellent investment—both from the humanitarian and the economic point of view.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SATURDAY NIGHT, A WELL-KNOWN weekly publication issued in Toronto, thinks the practice of writing letters to the newspapers in the sense of getting them published is greatly overdone in Canada. Some of the letter-writers, it says, are obviously insane, many are of feeble intellect, while those who have an average equipment of intellectual powers seem usually to be animated by some motive quite different from the elucidation of truth or the allaying of controversy. In fact, it maintains, the Letters to the Editor Department is by way of becoming a public nuisance. It refers feelingly to the contributions which appeared in that department of the press during the election campaign, many of which, it says, contained statements which editors knew were untrue, and should have been edited.

Our contemporary seems to have missed the very basic purpose of the letter department of a newspaper. It is not supposed to be a symposium of only those views of which an editor approves. Its chief interest lies in the diversity of opinion its contents reflect. If it were edited on the lines suggested by Saturday Night it would be nothing but an exhibition of regimentation which even reactionaries who love that sort of thing would not read. Nor can it be a compendium of assured truth, for there is not, there never has been and probably there never will be, such a thing in speech or print, including Saturday Night itself, even if it changed its name and were issued on Sunday Night. Subject to restrictions imposed by decency, space, legibility and public interest, this department is intended to reveal a cross-section of public thought on matters of public concern. There is interest sometimes in even the emanations of the feeble minded, much more, in fact, than in some contributions of so-called intellectual giants.

Unquestionably public nuisances get into the letter column, but the department itself is not a public nuisance. Even if it were, it would not be without public interest. Public nuisances sometimes are public benefactors, even in Toronto. In fact, some of Toronto's neighbors contend that the city itself is a public nuisance in relation to the rest of Ontario, but we would not think of saying such a wicked thing, which would be worse than the stoning of the prophets. The letter department also serves a useful purpose in reflecting the very deficiencies which Saturday Night regards as its weakness. After all, insanity and feebleness of intellect sometimes can be cured, but they first must manifest themselves. And they often are merely relative terms, for there are very few actually sane people or strong intellects in the world, if we may judge by the condition of society to-day.

Our objection to many letters to the editor regardless of their political, social or economic or spiritual views, for one thing is based upon the failure of their writers to read and digest the list of rules governing publication at the top of the column. These rules require brevity, legibility and certain other conditions, but letters which violate all of them continue to pour into this office—and are thrown away without even being read. The requirements admit of no exception, no matter how important the writers may be or think they may be. Other contributors imagine that a week in which they do not see their names over contributions in newspapers is a week lost, irrespective of the fact that scores of other writers also have views that they want published. The wider variety there is in subjects and also in writers, the more interesting the letter department is sure to be.

CANADA'S NICKEL

AT DUNCAN RECENTLY, DR. H. V. Warren, mineralogist at the University of British Columbia, is reported to have deplored the "smug hypocrisy of Canadian statesmen at Geneva" who, unmindful of their 4,000 miles of undefended frontier, said that Canada was not interested in fighting "when actually she was making a profit by shipping metals to warring countries which would likely use them against her."

Dr. Warren said Canada's exports of nickel—one of the most important basic metals necessary in the manufacture of shells—to Italy was greater last month than the total of the previous year. "If you are going to defend yourself against a man with a club it is too late to do so when the man has the club raised over your head," he said, and added: "It is important for Canada to realize her mineral wealth and, consequently, her obligation to the world in general. We have and must play a part in the next twenty years and must decide whether it is to be for peace or war. We can not ship nickel, of which we have 90 per cent of the supply, aluminum, iron and steel, etc., without knowing where it is going. It is useless for 'elder statesmen' to get up and tell us that we do not know where it is going when we can look at figures showing the consumption of a country and perhaps find that it is probably to be used against our own people."

Dr. Warren, of course, was speaking before sanctions were applied against Italy by the League of Nations. Under this prohibition Canada can not now export key metallic products to that country.

WHO CARES?

AN ASSOCIATED PRESS DISPATCH from New York tells us that the former Barbara Hutton, now for the second time tied up to what passes muster for Old World nobility, is only worth about $5,000,000, that reports the $40,000,000 she is supposed to have inherited from Woolworth father, were more or less of a myth.

According to The Brooklyn Eagle, a reputable newspaper of that part of the neighboring republic, the mortgages of the now Countess von Haugwitz-Reventlow sold by her attorneys yesterday had a face value of $352,700. The amount received was not disclosed, but it was reported that mortgages on property on Long Island were sold at 25 to 50 per cent below face value.

Then The Brooklyn Eagle goes on to say: "It is understood the former Miss Hutton has given orders to dispose of all the real estate interests she possesses."

It is rather a sad thing that a young woman, married twice before she has reached the age of thirty, should be discovered one fine morning worth less than $5,000,000!

To people of any sort of sense of decency it will occur—if they have their mental faculties intact—that this twice-married daughter of a man of great wealth ought to have been taken across the parental knee.

THE BRITISH CABINET SHUFFLE

PREMIER BALDWIN, WHO HAS A COMfortable working majority in the British House of Commons, has called in former Premier Ramsay MacDonald to resume his post as Lord President of the Council.

This may not be a very exciting government post, but the Prime Minister naturally was bound to keep a post for his colleague whom he had succeeded. He also has called in the son of Rt. Hon. Ramsay MacDonald, Malcolm, who came to Victoria a few years ago with a debating team. Malcolm McDonald will, on winning a seat, assume cabinet rank as Minister for the Dominions.

Mr. Malcolm MacDonald will exchange jobs with Rt. Hon. James H. Thomas, former secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen of Great Britain and latterly a member of the "National" government. The son of the former Prime Minister, of course, will not have much to do, in the light of Dominion status as established under the Statute of Westminster.

Mr. Thomas, in his capacity of Colonial Minister, will have a stiff task to perform. The Dominions are running their own affairs, as already pointed out, but the former Minister for the Dominions will have to deal with more than 6,000,000 square miles of territory and many races all over the world.

As an organizer, perhaps, Mr. Thomas will be able to handle this delicate situation better than the junior member of the Baldwin government into whose shoes Mr. Baldwin has placed him.

THE REGINA INQUIRY

SOME INTERESTING EVIDENCE IS being given before the commission appointed to inquire into the riot at Regina last summer, and before the inquiry is over a strong light may be shed upon many aspects of the trouble which so far have not been clear to the public. Hon. J. G. Gardiner, then Premier of Saskatchewan and now federal Minister of Agriculture, on Thursday told the commission that Col. S. T. Wood, Assistant Commissioner of the R.C.M.P., had received instructions to stop the relief camp strikers' march at Regina in spite of the frequent protests of the provincial government. Perhaps the inquiry will disclose why, if their proceeding was unlawful, the strikers were permitted to march all the way from Vancouver, and just why the trek was to be ended at Regina.

Another suggestive piece of Mr. Gardiner's evidence was that he had been requested by federal officials and the railways to consider and deal with the marchers as trespassers on railway property, but had refused to do so. What would have been the outcome if the Saskatchewan government had acceded to these requests? Would the police have been expected to try to eject the trespassers by force, and would that not have resulted in bloodshed? Was there any connection between this proposal and the decision of the government then in power to stop the march at Regina? Was Regina to be the stage for an exhibition of the strong-arm measures which one of the Montreal newspapers urged the then federal government to adopt? The present commission may clear up some of these unknown factors. After its report has been submitted to the government, Parliament probably will give the affair an even wider ventilation.

WHAT OTHER PAPERS SAY

A QUAKELET

The Providence Journal

A tremor that would hardly be noticed in less-favored regions is hailed as an earthquake in fortunate Rhode Island. Our earth is all the time under internal strains that affect its surface even to the slow upheaval and subsidence of continents or portions of them. Also the tidal effect of the sun and the moon is constantly at work. Along our shores its operations are obvious. But deep in the earth the solid, still more the broken, rocks feel its disturbing pull. As this effect accumulates, it may cause slipping along faults. Regions of the oldest mountains, like the eastern United States and Canada, have largely outlived their danger. The whole rim of the Pacific is an active danger zone, where destructive earthquakes may occur at any time. Fortunately we may look back upon our recent tremor as an interesting experience rather than a devastating calamity or a warning of impending evil.

Loose Ends

If you are a British Columbian you take big chances—Particularly from suicide—Mr. Leacock sees the need of men like Mr. Leacock—And Mr. Jull still leaves the Economic Man pretty cold.

By BRUCE HUTCHISON

VIOLENT DEATH

A NEW ANALYSIS of violent death in British Columbia, just issued across the Bay, shows some surprising facts. It shows, for example, that you have more chance of being drowned than of being killed by an automobile, but while the world is excited about motor accidents you are seldom told to go slow in the water. Your chances of being murdered are slight, but your biggest risk—bigger than the risk of drowning or getting killed at work or by an automobile—is suicide.

In the last year 111 people committed suicide in British Columbia. About a quarter of the people who died violently wanted to. This indicates that there must be more unhappiness about the country than we had suspected. Altogether the figures indicate that life in British Columbia is a dangerous business, and had better not be attempted if you haven't a stout heart.

At the same time as the British Columbia government is showing us that 111 people commit suicide in one year in this little province of 700,000 people, the world is engaged in a general debate on the right of people to take their own lives if they want to. Learned doctors are giving opinions pro and con. You read about it in every newspaper. Apparently in British Columbia people don't worry about this argument. When they want to get out of a jam they go ahead and do it and nobody stops them. Suicide is now more common and fashionable than killing yourself in an automobile.

TIGHT ENOUGH

HERE IS another strange thing—only seven British Columbia drivers who got into accidents last year were considered officially as intoxicated. This, of course, is preposterous. I dare say you and I could both name more than seven drivers who were drunk last year and smashed up their cars; though possibly my friends are more likely to do it than yours are. But you have to prove to the judge that a man is drunk before he is officially drunk. He may be drunk as a lord in the social sense and a nuisance at the party, but the unfortunate police have to prove it in a court of law, and apparently the courts of law are extremely careful, as they should be. If you're just a bit tiddly, you're not officially drunk.

The trouble is that while the real drunk seldom drives a car, the fellow with a nice glow about him nearly always does and, though thoroughly respectable, his reactions are slow, he can't put his foot on the brake fast enough and he gets into trouble.

Evidently we need some new scientific test, so far not devised, to show when a man is just tight enough for a fashionable party, but too tight for an automobile. And that is a tough job for the courts. Perhaps it would be safe to lay down this legal definition—if a man is in a proper condition for a modern fashionable party, he isn't in a proper condition for a modern fashionable automobile.

PRACTICAL MEN

MR. STEPHEN LEACOCK recently made a little after-dinner speech somewhere or other and, as there were no newspapermen present, reported it himself, quite competently. The trouble with society, said the great Canadian humorist, was that it wasn't producing enough men like Mr. Leacock. Mr. Leacock said he looked about him in vain these days for men like Mr. Leacock. Instead, the educational system was turning out practical men of affairs in droves and hardly any scholars. The scholar and philosopher, he said, shouldn't be practical; should be as impractical as possible, for it was only the impracticable fellows through the centuries who ever really did any deep thinking. The men of affairs were too busy with their affairs.

This is an unpopular theory in this practical age, but how true! How true that our fundamental ideas on things always come out of the library and the laboratory and not out of the market place or the executive's office or the Houses of Parliament. Unwittingly the great captains of industry, our financiers and our politicians, are governed not by forces that they have set in motion, but by invisible ideas set afloat by some obscure gentleman in a university lecture room or a cold garret.

Your modern youth, disillusioned with life, having no confidence whatever in his parents' generation, in our political system, in society at large or in religion, doesn't know it, but he is the child of Darwin, who started people thinking that they were only animals after all. He is the nephew of Marx who discovered the idea of the class war.

His attitude towards sex doesn't come, as he imagines, from the movies, but from that disagreeable gentleman Freud, another scholar whose idea has permeated the world like poison gas.

You may think of modern youth as the mere transitory product of the depression. He is the product of fifty years of work in the laboratories of the scientists, and the studies of countless conflicting philosophers and economists. His basic ideas, like yours and mine, never come from the men of affairs, who really haven't any, but from the impracticable lads who have nothing else but.

Mr. Leacock has this thought to comfort him in his declining years—in his humorous writings he has always pictured man as a mad creature and society as a kind of humorous nightmare, and everybody has laughed at his wild, delightful exaggeration. Now in the light of current events, it turns out that Mr. Leacock wasn't writing nonsense about society at all, but the plain, solemn truth. He is one of the few men who have perceived and set down accurately the present state of the world. And everybody thought all this time that he was only fooling.

ECONOMIC MAN

MR. SANDERS, the Socialist, and Mr. Jull, the Social Creditor, continue their epic, long-term battle of words through the correspondence columns of this newspaper. I know you have read and understood every word about the price level, the flow of production and the cost of a pair of shoes. (The ideal human being in the philosophy of Messrs. Sanders and Jull seems to wear nothing but a pair of shoes. Perhaps somebody will knit this Economic Man a nice red muffler for Christmas.)

You understood it all, no doubt, but may I draw your attention to a slight oversight on the part of Mr. Jull, which he has been kind enough to point out himself in another letter to the editor. On Saturday, November 16, one regrets to learn, Mr. Jull, referring to Mr. Sander's listing of total costs of a pair of shoes for the poor naked Economic Man, said: "But he did not state specifically" that certain costs were incurred.

I know you have worried a great deal over this grave blunder which, of course, gave all of us economists acute distress. You will be glad to know, according to Mr. Jull's latest letter to the editor, that his former letter should have read "But he did state specifically, etc."

What a relief it is to know that, my friends! That being clear, you can safely go ahead with your preparations for Christmas. And when you are out buying presents, you might think of the poor ideal Economic Man who, in the hands of Messrs. Sanders and Jull, is going about the streets and the letters to the editor in a pair of boots, when there's frost nearly every night now. These economic arguments may leave you quite cold. But what of the poor Economic Man himself?

AU REVOIR

AND THAT will be all for a little while. I'm going away for a bit to recover from the recent attacks made on me by the followers of Charles Dickens. It may take several weeks in the nice warm sunshine of eastern Canada. If I should hear anything of interest down there, I'll let you know.

Twenty-five Years Ago To-day

NOVEMBER 23, 1910

(From The Times Files.)

London, Nov. 23.—Among unmarked graves in Pentonville prison to-day lies the body of Dr. H. H. Crippen, while Ethel Claire Le Neve is aboard the liner Majestic, sailing for America.

Crippen was hanged at 9 o'clock this morning. Shortly before death he embraced the Catholic faith, and was accompanied to the gallows by Father Carey. Crippen went to the gallows without confessing.

The doomed man's last night was a wakeful one. He called frequently to the death watch and asked the time.

That is it vitally essential to the people of Victoria that some source of water supply other than Elk Lake should be secured at the earliest possible moment, and that grave suspicion rests upon the purity of the water now being used, were the declarations made to The Times this morning by prominent medical men.

The members of the citizens' water committee summoned by Mayor Morley early in the year to assist the City Council in solving the water problem confronting the city have issued a signed statement setting out their belief that it will be in the best interests of Victoria to have the by-law for the expropriation of the Esquimalt Water Works Company pass to-morrow.

Never before did the future of Vancouver Island loom up more brilliantly than at the present, and evidence of a new epoch in the history of this island is shown on every hand. The pace which is being set is well in keeping with that of the rest of the Dominion. Probably the most inspiring proof of the island's prosperity is that of the number of incoming settlers, who are taking up pre-emptions wherever these can be obtained.

These rules, which henceforth will be carried out absolutely, are designed as much for the protection of our patient readers as for that of The Times.

DICKENS

To the Editor:—In the hope that lightning will not strike twice in the same place, I venture to add to my first letter regarding Charles Dickens.

It seems to be regarded that because I ventured to say that the writer was practically unreadable by any civilized man, that it was my opinion that all old things should be abandoned simply because they are old, and in particular Shakespeare and the Bible should be regarded as obsolescent. All of us, I dare say, could read both of the last two far more than we do and with considerable advantage.

Because a piece of writing is old should not mean that it is worthless; neither should a novelist of the Victorian age be held above criticism, and because none of us can hope to profit by arguing about tastes, we might derive some benefit by wading through any of Charles Dickens's books and asking ourselves whether we have been entertained or not. For I woud submit that the first duty of a novelist is to entertain and that consideration of his successful propaganda for any particular scheme of things is quite secondary. There is no answer to boredom.

Now, there may be "hundreds of thousands of the best literary minds of Great Britain" who are capable of voting that "David Copperfield" is the best novel in the world. All that this can show is that popular education in Great Britain has not made the progress we like to think it has. Or else—which is more probable—a large majority of the voters have not read the book. I read, with interest, that this work can be best appreciated by "a Canadian of either sex, born on the Arctic Circle, standing on their heads, kicking up their heels in high glee to the zenith."

The argument that because successful films have been made from some of Charles Dickens's books, and therefore he must be a great writer, is not altogether sound. The two mediums are vastly different and a bad novel can make a good film and a good novel a bad one.

Might we not accept, then, as a ground for discussion, that the success or otherwise of Charles Dickens's works depends, now-a-days, on his ability to entertain us, and might we not also come to the conclusion that although some of his work has still some value, for the most part the wrappings of sentimentality and caricature in which the more entertaining features are swaddled are completely foreign to the best of our present-day writers?

It would seem to be a great mistake for any of us to accept any institution without adequate consideration, and it is difficult to see why Charles Dickens should be above criticism.

RED CROSS

To the Editor:—May I have the hospitality of your columns for the following statement about the Red Cross and the Ethiopian War.

The Ethiopian Red Cross has appealed through the International Red Cross Committee of Geneva to all national Red Cross organizations to help in its duty of succouring sick and wounded soldiers. Without outside help the Ethiopian Red Cross is facing an almost impossible task. Recently organized, it lacks both experience and money.

A number of national Red Cross societies have already responded to the appeal. Several European Red Cross societies are arranging to send trained personnel. Others have made substantial gifts of money. This is undoubtedly the most urgent immediate need.

I appeal to my fellow citizens to assist our Canadian Red Cross Society to do its part in fulfilling the original and primary task of the Red Cross—"to furnish aid to the sick and wounded of armies in time of war." Please send contributions to the Honorary Treasurer of the Society, F. Gordon Osler, 621 Jarvis Street, Toronto, Ontario.

RELIEF ALLOWANCE

To the Editor:—Would you allow us a few lines in which to deal with some points which seem of importance to the unemployed? We place before your readers the present clothing allowance of $1.76 (one dollar seventy-six cents) every three months, and we ask that they visualize getting shoes, shirts, skirts, dresses or underclothing from this amount, especially at this time of the year. The fact is this: It is not enough. Another point we desire to call attention to is the ruling of relief committees in regard to residence of anyone applying for relief. Some of these rulings are contrary to the Municipal Act, a part of the B.N.A. Act, although we have been taught the B.N.A. Act is the foundation of Canadian principles of government.

We cite the case of a man, woman and two children who have resided here for the past fifteen months on relief, which has now been cut off. The city relief department refusing them assistance, it was necessary to apply to the Chief of Police for food, which was secured.

This seems a chaotic form of relief administration. Heretofore, it was generally understood that the police station was the headquarters of law enforcement, not a relief depot.

We ask, "Just where is the relief station—on Pisgard Street or on Johnson Street?"

Although need has usually been considered sufficient excuse to issue relief under the Municipal Act, still it seems to lack pressure.

The refusal of relief authorities to deal with delegations of unemployed force us to act through these channels.

Y.P.S. Learn Of Early Indians

Forty young people at a recent meeting heard W. M. Halliday, former Indian Agent at Alert Bay and Mr. Chow Ling of the Chinese United Church talk on the Christian development among the Indians and Chinese respectively.

Prior to the address a short business meeting was held. The comedy play, "Here Comes Charlie," will be presented on November 26 and 27 in the St. John's auditorium. E. Gray, president of the local council asked the young people for their support at the local council fellowship hours and also to take an interest in the A.Y.P.A. monthly. Misses Ellen Varney, Margaret Ray, Joan Self, and Messrs. Bob Murry, Clive Dixon and Jack Cash were welcomed to the meeting.

Mr. Halliday spoke of the harships of the early missionaries and white settlers, and the peculiar customs of the Indian people. The present day service of the Columbia Coast Mission relieved much of the untold suffering and sickness among the natives and whites. Mr. Halliday paid tribute to the Rev. John Antle for his noble work.

Mr. Ling gave a brief talk on the early Chinese religion and the development of Christianity in China. Over 1,000 Chinese were baptized into the Church in 1934. In 1807 an English clergyman had traveled to China and preached the Gospel to the Chinese for the first time. In China denominations are not known, the Christian church being a united one. In conclusion, Mr. Ling made a plea for the Western world to assist the unfortunate Chinese whom the word of God had not reached.

A sing-song and refreshments under the convenership of Miss Iris Smith brought the evening to a successful close.

The Ladies' Guild of St. Aidan's United Church, Mount Tolmie, will hold the annual bazaar on Wednesday, Nov. 27. The bazaar will be opened at 3 p.m. by Mrs. Norman Whittaker. Afternoon tea, in charge of Mrs. F. Dawson, will be served from 4 to 5 o'clock. The following ladies will be in charge of stalls: Mesdames F. Jennings, J. Taylor, Williams, Burwash and Griffin.

The C.G.I.T. will have candy for sale, while the Tillicum Club will have charge of the fish pond.

A concert, convened by Mrs. D. Gilbert and Mrs. Griffiths, will be presented, commencing at 8 o'clock.

TO SELL GOODS MADE BY BLIND

Variety of Articles Will Be Offered in Special Stall at David Spencer Ltd.

From November 25 to the end of the month a sale of articles made by the blind of Victoria and vicinity will be held.

Through the courtesy of David Spencer Limited this special sale will be held in the boys' department of the store, the entrance being on Government Street.

The ladies' auxiliary of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, helpers of the blind in Victoria, is sponsoring the sale and extends an invitation to the citizens of Victoria to visit the exhbiton, examine the work, and by their presence, interest, and purchases, give help and encouragement to the workers. Every cent paid goes to the blind persons who made them.

Many useful and dainty articles made by the deft fingers of those trained to work in darkness, will be offered for sale—work that has meant pluck, patience and perseverance in the making. Baskets large and small and of many sorts will be on sale, clothes baskets, shopping baskets, etc., a large variety to choose from—baskets, strong, well made and serviceable. Wicker and glass tea-trays, pin-trays, teapot stands, tall wicker vases for long-stemmed flowers. Leather goods, a wide variety; something new in Christmas toy, and many other dainty novelties.

METICULOUS CARE

The work displayed has been made by pupils of Miss Dorothy Stark, the efficient home teacher for Victoria district. Only those who have intimate knowledge of the meticulous care required in making finger-tips do service in place of eyes, can fully understand the infinite patience that has gone into the making of the articles offered for sale.

Members of the auxiliary have been busy in connection with the sale. Miss Rowan will be in charge, and others, including Mrs. T. A. Rickard, Mrs. Thorpe-Doubble, Mrs. D. J. Angus, Mrs. F. J. D. Pemberton, Mrs. W. H. Molson, Miss Hensley, Mrs. B. S. Heisterman and Miss Ruth Jones will lend assistance.

CANADA LEADS WORLD

Canada is a world leader in work for the blind. Canada led the world in giving free postage on Braille books for the blind, and other nations have followed this altruistic movement. Nova Scotia was in the vanguard with free education for the blind and other provinces followed. Work for the blind in Canada is well organized, with Captain Baker, M.C., as its chief. The head office of the C.N.I.B. is in Toronto and in the wide stretch of country from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific no blind person who needs training is passed by.

In this city and the vicinity there are now sixty-three blind persons, men, women and children.

DUNCAN MAN FOUND DEAD

Duncan, Nov. 23.—Thomas Wellington Dowd, fuel merchant, was found dead at his home Wednesday night by the police, following an investigation when friends failed to get any response to telephone calls. Trade Agreement Pleases Industry

New York, Nov. 23.—In a statement cabled from Europe to the International Day Celebration during Automobile Show Week, James D. Mooney, vice-president of General Motors Corporation in charge of overseas operations, hailed the trade agreements programme as a powerful instrument in the interests of international peace.

"The automobile industry is to be congratulated on the support it has given to the trade agreements programme," Mr. Mooney's message said. "We are all vitally interested in reconstructing a broader base for international trade and particularly for a freer flow of motor cars to the countries throughout the world that are so eager to buy them. This flow is hampered to-day by political factors which are associated with the universal fallacy that a nation can export without importing. Fortunately, economic conditions throughout the world are improving, and this will probably have the effect of liberalizing the attitude of the various governments in the direction of a freer flow of international trade.

"The present war scare in Europe, while it is naturally very disturbing, may result in the long run in a considerable amount of good, in the sense that progress is definitely being made in the development of a more widespread understanding that the root causes of war are economic causes. The present trends in Europe toward war can be traced rather definitely to economic nationalism, with its inevitable consequence the starved flow of international trade and its inevitable corollary the shutting off of raw materials needed by maunfacturing countries. Accordingly, the efforts that have been made in United States during the past year under Secretary Hull's able guidance, to stimulate international trade on a really world-wide basis, through the trade agreements programme and under the unconditional most-favored nation principle, I consider to be the most constructive contribution that could be made toward removing the seeds and causes of war."

VICTORIA COLLEGE NOTES

"Idealism" was the subject of Mme. Sanderson's address at the meeting of the Students' Christian Movement on Tuesday. She told of the lives of historical figures who possessed lofty ideals, touching on the accomplishments of Joan of Arc. Mme. Sanderson discussed what the term "idealism" signified, and the problem of modern youth, to choose between what was real and what was transitory. President Ernie Bishop extended thanks to the speaker and announced that Vivian Shoemaker and Miss Ravenhill will address the next two meetings of this society.

On Tuesday evening, the literary society held its semi-annual open meeting, at the Provincial Library, to discuss Shakespearean manuscripts. Mun Hope, president, welcomed those present. Mr. Braund, a member of the society, gave a description of the different folios in which Shakespeare's works are recorded. The Boydell Engravings, depicting Shakespearean scenes, were described by Maxine Heilbroner.

Dr. Kaye Lamb, Provincial Librarian, gave an interesting account of libraries in general, mentioning in particular the growth of British Columbia's provincial library. Miss Cann, honorary president, spoke briefly.

The meeting adjourned to reference room, where the Shakespearean works, the Boydell Engravings, and other relative works were specially arranged to illustrate Shakespeare's environment.

Miss Cicely Holmes, former secretary of this society, has resigned, and Miss Braidwood takes her place.

The registrar has posted a provisional Christmas examination timetable. The exams will commence on December 7 and finish on December 18.

The Science Club held its regular meeting on Wednesday evening, with president G. L. Dunlop in the chair. Professor Cunningham, the guest speaker, spoke on "Hydrogen Ions in Biology." The lecture was illustrated with demonstrations of the colorimetric method of finding the acidity or alkalinity of substances. This was the last meeting of this club for the pre-Christmas semester.

Wednesday, at noon, the Victoria College Christian Union held a discussion on the Third Chapter of Romans.

The Men's Discussion Club sponsored an interesting debate on Friday, with Dougas MacIntyre in the chair. The preliminary discussion was, resolved "That Dancing Is Detrimental to Modern Society." George Whittaker and John McCabe were on the affirmative, with Paul Henderson and Don Stewart on the negative. The negative were awarded the decision. A second debate, resolved "That Smoking Is Not in the Best Interests of Human Beings," was won by George Whittaker on the affirmative, and with R. N. Murdoch on the negative.

Omega Tau Gamma held their second social of the season at the home of Kay Junget, on Satellite Road. The guests of honor were Professor P. Elliott and Mme. Sanderson.

Wide Approach To New Bridge

Four-lane Traffic Highway Will Lead to South Side of Fraser Structure

Preparing for the construction of fully modern approaches to the new Fraser River Bridge, the B.C. Government to-day issued notices under the Highway Act setting aside additional land for highway purposes on the south side of the bridge site.

The Pacific Highway will be widened sixty-five feet for half a mile beyond the south end of the bridge. This will provide space for four traffic lanes upon the highway leading up to the bridge.

Provision is also made for an extra sixty feet in width along the Liverpool Road, which will connect the Scott Road, leading from the Ladner area, with the bridge approach.

Bad curves will be eliminated, he explained.

Brentwood

Mrs. G. Bickford, Clarke Avenue, entertained Tuesday afternoon in honor of her daughter Joyce's third birthday. Among the guests were Mrs. F. Michell, Mrs. J. Young, Mrs. Willard Michell, Mrs. B. Bickford, Mrs. A. Lacoursiere, Mrs. A. J. Guy, Mrs. M. Bickford, Mrs. A. Francis, Mrs. H. Andrew, Maurice Michell, Ronald Bickford, Leona and Daphne Francis, Joan Michell and Barry Bickford.

The GOLDEN FEATHER

by Robert Bruce © 1935 NEA Service, Inc.

Lanning was smiling his stereotyped smile—the smile of the man who is everybody's friend but who watches all the angles, just the same. He put his hands on the table and leaned his big hulk over them.

"You don't mind if I introduce an old friend of mine, do you?" he said. "This is Sandy Harkins—Sandy from the hair and Harkins from the family. Sandy, this charming young lady is Miss Jean Dunn, and the lucky man with her is Bobby Wallace."

Bobby got up and stuck out his hand. Harkins extended a large, well-manicured hand and gave him a firm grip and a friendly smile. Then he turned back to Jean, to whom he had bowed while Bobby was getting out of his chair, and said, "We are butting in, are we?"

They murmured polite denials.

"Well," said Sandy, "you know how it is. Here I am, a stranger in this town, sitting here wishing I could just have one dance before I leave, and not knowing a soul to dance with. And then my friend Art comes up, and I see him say hello to you folks as he passes your table, and so I get up my nerve and think, 'Now maybe if Art takes me over and introduces me to those people, I could get that one dance—just one dance'."

He grinned disarmingly, as if to say, "Shucks, I'm just a friendly guy from the country, and nobody gets mad at me." Then he turned to Bobby and said, "Would you object if I asked your young lady for just one little dance?"

His voice sounded vaguely southern, or western, or something. Jean thought. It was lazy and pleasant, and it made you like him. Even Bobby seemed to be taken with him.

"Not at all," said Bobby, grinning back at him.

Sandy Harkins turned to her again. "Lady, I need a dance awful bad," he said. "I'll bring you back safe and sound to your boy friend as soon as the music stops."

"Then," said Jean, "we'd better start, because this number's going to be over in another minute."

She got up, slipped into his arm, and they glided away as smoothly as possible, considering the crowded state of the dance floor. He was a good dancer, she discovered, moving with the effortless grace of the born athlete; for a moment he was silent, as he manoeuvred her through the crowd. Presently he looked down and grinned.

"I didn't bother you, did I, earlier, staring at you?" he asked.

"Were you staring? I didn't notice."

"No? Baby, don't tell papa lies. Anyhow, I didn't mean to bother you, and I hoped you wouldn't be mad. But how could I help looking at the prettiest girl in the place?"

This was pretty obvious, thought Jean; still, she admitted, it was rather pleasant. She made some flippant reply, and he went on talking in an easy, lazy drawl. She learned that he was in this city of Dover temporarily, that he had no idea how soon he would leave, that he was in some sort of business—she wasn't quite clear just what—that kept him traveling about a great deal, and that he had no hesitation whatever in declaring that she, Jean Dunn, was tops. She grew gay and flippant in response to his mood, and before long she discovered that she was enjoying this dance very much indeed; so much so that she felt a genuine pang of regret when the music finally stopped.

"Would you just faint and fall in if I should call you up some day?" he asked, as they started back to the table.

"No," she said slowly, "but you don't know my phone number."

"Don't worry about that, baby. What it takes to find out phone numbers grows on me. Would you hang up on me?"

She ought to tell him not to call; she knew that as well as she knew her own name. But what was the harm? A telephone call, after all—and besides, he was nice looking, and he had an amusing way of talking. She found herself saying, "Try it and see."

They got back to the table, and Harkins and Lanning left them, after a few moments of inconsequential talk. Bobby followed them with his eyes as they walked away.

"Seems like a nice chap, doesn't he?" he asked.

Good old Bobby! thought Jean. He's probably jealous as can be, inside but he's too nice to show it. And she had a sudden revulsion of feeling, in which she looked on Bobby with real tenderness, and told herself that she would marry him as soon as—well, as soon as—well, some day; and meanwhile, if Mr. Harkins did call her up she would just tell him that she couldn't see him. . . .

"Well, look who's out seeing the sights, said a man's voice. Startled, she looked up. Bobby had sprung to his feet, and was eagerly shaking hands with a quiet-looking, dark-haired man in a neat grey lounge suit; and as the man turned to her she recognized him and said, "Why, Larry Glen—where'd you come from?"

Larry Glenn shook hands with her and helped himself to a vacant chair at an adjoining table, which he drew up between her and Bobby. He sat down, leaned his elbows on the table, and smiled first at her and then at Bobby.

"I guess I'm getting old," he said. "The children seem to be growing up."

Seeing him was almost like going back home. She had not seen him since she and Bobby had been in high school. At one time he had been the unwitting object of her first schoolgirl crush; she had been a high school freshman then, and he had been a person of glamour and romance—the college football star, back in the home town to coach the high school football team. He had been a friend of her father's, and he had often dined in their home—and looked down on her with a friendly tolerance. Then he had gone east, somewhere, and she had heard that he had become a lawyer, and later she had heard that he had some obscure but interesting kind of job with the government. And here he was again, older and soberer now, with friendly eyes and a firm chin and an older-brother air toward both of them that somehow made them both feel that if they ever got in any kind of trouble they could go at once to Larry Glenn and be got out of it.

"What're you kids doing up here in Dover, anyway?" he was asking.

"Kids!" said Bobby indignantly. "That's swell. We've been out of college exactly one year."

"Bobby's selling autos, and I'm a swelegant stenographer," said Jean.

"She's a bug on earning her own living now, but some day she's going to marry me," said Bobby, ignoring the face she made at him.

Larry Glen looked from one to the other.

"Well," he said, "I heard a couple of years ago that things were drifting that way—"

"They're not!" said Jean. Then she checked herself and said, "Well—not just now, anyhow."

HOROSCOPE

"The stars incline but do not compel"

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1935

According to astrology this is one of the rarely fortunate days in planetary government. All the mental clouds should disappear, the spirit should be uplifted and the vision should clear.

The clergy should benefit under this sway, which is supposed to strengthen leadership and to encourage acceptance of spiritual ideas.

Under this rule, reverence for things sacred should gain and a sense of proportion should rule men and women. It is an auspicious day for confessing mistakes and for making good resolutions.

All the signs appear to presage great activity for men of every class. While the stars smile on women they are to be in the background wherever physical strength is a factor.

There is to be a period when men will dominate even more than in the past. A warlike trend and training in the use of firearms are indicated.

Sports will be widely discussed at this time and the Olympic games next year will cause sensational happenings. Decisions will be influenced by unexpected events, it is foretold.

This should be a favorable day for wearing new clothes and for enjoying whatever is beautiful. Music and the arts are well directed.

It is a fairly lucky day for romance, but suitors will be likely to take the adoration of girls for granted. Egotism is to be exceedingly prevalent.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a year of rather disturbing experiences. Affairs may be prosperous but shocks are to be expected.

Children born on this day probably will be of forceful character and dynamic intellect. Subjects of this sign may be real leaders.

Henry Thomas Buckle, English historian, was born on this day, 1821. Others who have celebrated it as a birthday include Frances Hodgson Burnett, novelist, 1849, and Baruch Spinoza, philosopher, 1632.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1935

Benefic aspects appear to dominate today, according to astrology. It is a day conducive to effective work along many lines of effort. Students should benefit from the planetary influences.

Building and construction projects are stimulated and engineers and chemists are subject to directions of the stars that presage great activity.

As the year draws to a close there may be a sense of change that is promising to many but threatening to some. Those who read the stars foretell much drama in international affairs.

Japan may become overconfident in world relations. It must be remembered that the Emperor is under unfortunate aspects that foreshadow troubles to his dynasty.

France is under a planetary government that appears to presage new groupings of world powers. Germany is to enter into a new relationship with its old enemy and France may benefit in unexpected ways.

Jupiter continues to help Russia, which will make powerful alliances and at the same time assume extraordinary independence of other nations.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a year of work and fair success. Journeys may be profitable socially and financially.

Children born on this day probably will be exceedingly fortunate all through their lives. Subjects of this sign of Sagittarius usually hit any mark they select.

Andrew Carnegie, financier, was born on this day, 1835. Others who have celebrated it as a birthday include Benjamin B. Lindsay, judge and reformer, 1869, and Charles Kemble, English actor, 1775.

Compliments W.I. On Handicrafts

An interesting display of the weaving and basketry made by members of its weavers' guild was on display at the bazaar arranged by the Victoria Women's Institute in the headquarters, 635 Fort Street, on Thursday afternoon, this feature being in charge of Mrs. J. L. White, the president, and Mrs. Ivor Austin.

John Kyle, director of technical education, in formally opening the affair congratulated the institutes on their initiative in reviving these fine handicrafts. He briefly touched upon the progress which had been made in handicrafts through the ages, and expressed the hope that the new impetus which has been given to handicrafts of all kinds might be something permanent, rather than a fancy which had caught the imagination for a short time and which will sink again into the discard.

Mrs. G. Sexton was the general convener and the various stalls were well patronized, a large number of visitors being welcomed during the afternoon. Mrs. Gus Brown and Mrs. A. R. Harness had charge of the candy stall; Mrs. E. S. Blair, the miscellaneous table; Mrs. L. Schmelz and Miss Schmelz, the house house, and Mrs. Day and Miss Maynard, the home cooking. In charge of the tea arrangements were Mrs. M. Laird, Mrs. J. Terry and other members of the institute.

The Truth About Diet

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN

YOU BURN CALORIES AT WORK

By Dr. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

We measure food energy in terms of calories. A calory is the amount of heat which would raise the temperature of 1,000 grams of water one degree, centigrade, or about the amount of heat required to raise four pounds of water one degree, Fahrenheit.

Dr. M. Fishbein

When a man who has been sitting still and using up 100 calories gets up and walks around, he doubles the demand for energy, or may actually treble it. It is not surprising, therefore, that he uses from 2,500 to 3,000 calories a day.

But muscular energy alone is not the important factor in fatigue.

A lecturer who talks for an hour burns up from 120 to 200 calories and each one of those who sit still and listen to him burns up 100 calories. Yet they may feel exceedingly tired thereafter. This introduces the mental factor which is very important in human life.

The business man who works with a plan for a sales campaign burns up less energy while he is thinking than when he fiddles with the pencils on his desk. But his mental process will tire him more quickly.

It is impossible to discuss food values in terms of energy without realizing how much energy certain well-known foods supply. Since we seldom eat foods in quantities small enough to furnish one or two calories, dietary experts have estimated food values in 100 calory portions.

Following are the amounts of some well-known foods which will yield 100 calories of energy:

Butter (nearly pure fat), about ⅓ ounce, or a heaping tablespoonful.

Sugar (pure carbohydrate), about 1 ounce, or 2 tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar.

Bread, about 1½ ounces, or two average slices.

Any dry cereal, or flour or meal, about 1 ounce, or 3 tablespoonfuls.

Milk, about 5 ounces (two-thirds of a glass).

Potato, 5 ounces (one fair-sized).

Banana, 5½ ounces, with skin (one average-sized).

Apple, 7 ounces whole (one good-sized).

Orange, 9-10 ounce (one large, or two small).

Orange juice, 8 ounces (a full-sized glass).

TO-DAY'S HEALTH QUESTION

Q.—I read recently of a new cure for dementia praecox. Is this authentic?

A.—Unfortunately such announcements are not authenticated by good evidence. There is no proof that any one has discovered a drug which can be taken internally, and which will lead to a return to sanity in patients with this disease. The announcement was certainly premature.

Guild Talent Tea—Under the auspices of the Women's Guild of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, the annual talent tea will be held in the lecture room of the church on Wednesday afternoon, November 27, from 3 till 6 o'clock. It is hoped all friends interested in furthering the work of the guild will support this undertaking.

Radialities

A new series of weekly programmes presenting Jose Manzanares and his South American orchestra over an extensive coast-to-coast Columbia network will begin Sunday, December 1, from 2.30 to 3 p.m., P.S.T. The orchestra will feature its unusual repertoire of Latin-American music, and will be heard every Sunday at the same time.

These programmes, sponsored by an automobile company, will round out and supplement in a unique way the Sunday evening hour, presented over the complete CBS network every Sunday from 6 to 7 p.m., P.S.T., and Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians, heard over the same network every Tuesday, from 9 to 10 p.m., P.S.T.

Jack Benny will celebrate his 200th broadcast when he steps to the NBC microphones on Sunday, December 1, at 8.30 p.m., P.S.T. Elaborate plans are under way to make this anniversary a gala radio event. Mary Livingstone, the Seattle poetess, will share honors with her husband. The mayor of Waukegan, Ill., Jack's home town, has been invited to participate.

Pending the early return of the celebrated comedy team to the Columbia Broadcasting System air waves in 1936, Colonel Lemuel Q. Stoopnagle and Budd temporarily will carry out separate plans on which each has had his heart set for some time past. For Colonel Stoopnagle, it will mean a transcontinental motor trip, beginning November 20, and a vacation on the West Coast. For Budd, it will mean his debut over the Columbia network on Saturday, November 23, from 8 to 8.35 p.m., M.S.T., in the triple role of band conductor, vocalist and master of ceremonies.

Alois Havrilla, NBC announcer, and Lynn Fontanne, famed actress now featured with Alfred Lunt in the Theatre Guild's production of "The Taming of the Shrew," were awarded the 1935 diction medals for radio and the stage of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

In order to meet the demands of programme development the British Broadcasting Company has erected new studios at Maida Vale, London. In building these new studios the opportunity has been taken to make certain experiments in studio design. The main premises were originally built to house one of the largest skating rinks in the world.

HOME WEDDING UNITES PAIR

Miss Doreen Calwell Becomes Bride To-day of Mr. Frank L. Gilbert

An interesting wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, 1961 Ash Street, at 2.30 o'clock this afternoon, when Rev. Dr. A. S. Imrie united in marriage Doreen Wilma, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Calwell, and Mr. Frank Gilbert, only son of Mrs. E. Gilbert, Pakington Street. The marriage service was performed in the drawing-room, the bridal party standing under a floral arch during the ceremony. White chrysanthemums were used in floral decorations throughout the home.

Mr. Calwell escorted his daughter into the drawing-room to the strains of the Wedding March played by Mr. Arthur J. Bird. She was a charming figure in her smart gown of imported crushed velvet in Dubonnet wine shade, fashioned on simple lines, with shirred tailored collar lined with gold metal cloth, long, full sleeves gathered at the wrists and the semi-fitting skirt flaring at the hem-line. Brilliant button ornaments adorned the front of the bodice and a belt of the velvet encircled the waist. Her hat was of the Dubonnet velvet, a reproduction of a French model hat, made with a halo of the velvet. As a contrast to the ensemble, the bride wore a corsage bouquet of gardenias.

Her only attendant was her sister, Miss Eleanor Calwell, who as bridesmaid wore a frock of Devon green chiffon velvet, modelled on form-fitting lines, with the bodice fashioned with high square neckline and long draped sleeves drawn into cuffs of the velvet, while velvet-covered buttons were used in trimming. Her corsage bouquet was of pink rosebuds. The bridegroom was supported by Mr. Arthur Cann. During the signing of the register, Mrs. G. Gillie, accompanied on the piano by Mr. A. J. Bird, rendered the vocal solo, "O Perfect Love." Mr. Thomas Johnson also rendered violin solos during the reception which followed the ceremony.

For the occasion the bride's mother, Mrs. Calwell, wore a floor-length gown of glade green Tigheera crepe, made with high, draped neckline, long, full sleeves slashed to the shoulders, and with bodice fastened down the back with tiny brilliants. Two square ornaments of brilliants defined the waistline in front, from which a fold of the material was drawn through and tied in a bow with long ends. Her hat matched her gown and she wore a corsage bouquet of pink carnations. Mrs. Gilbert, mother of the bridegroom, chose for the occasion a smart dress of wine-colored crepe, a hat to match and wore a corsage bouquet of white carnations.

Refreshments were served in the dining-room, the table being covered with a pink damask cloth, and centred with a handsome three-tier wedding cake, surrounded by pink tulle. Assisting in serving were the Misses Dora Dalby, Phyllis Ellis, Edna Ashton and Mynne Baker.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert left on the afternoon boat for Seattle, the bride traveling in a rust-colored dress with overcoat of brown French cut-velour, trimmed with a dyed squirrel collar that extended to form a trimming for the pockets. From Seattle, they will motor to San Francisco and on their return to Victoria will make their home at 1941 St. Ann Street, Oak Bay.

SCOTCH EVENT NEXT FRIDAY

Colorful Cabaret Will Be Feature of St. Andrew's Day at Empress

St. Andrew's Day, Friday, November 29, will be observed in Victoria in gala style.

For the second year in succession a cabaret at which Scotch dances will be almost exclusively featured, will be staged in the ballroom of the Empress Hotel next Friday evening, and the affair promises to be one of the outstanding events of the season.

The kilts and bagpipes will be largely in evidence, and the dances to be presented will have a distinctive appeal to the Scotch residents, as well as the rest of the citizenry.

The dancing of the eightsome reels is expected to cause quite a furore, and other notable presentations will include the traditional "Reel o' Tulloch" and "Seann Truibhas," as well as the spectacular Highland Fling and sword dances. Some of the finest Scotch talent in the city will assist in making the cabaret a memorable event.

There will be a large representation of the Sixteenth Canadian Scottish, as officers of the regiment and their wives have signified their intention of attending and giving color to the affair.

Last year's St. Andrew's cabaret was well attended, but next Friday's cabaret is expected to go over in a big way, as reservations are being made daily.

Pipers of the Canadian Scottish, in full regalia, will play for the special dances, and the Empress orchestra, directed by William F. Tickle, will offer an up-to-the-minute repertoire of modern dance hits, as well as the popular Scotch numbers.

The evening opened with a toast to the guest of honor, following which music and singing took place, with Miss Hilda Graham and Mr. Earl Sarsiat at the piano. Mr. Wilson celebrated his birthday by dancing a waltz with one of the guests to the music of "When I Grow Too Old To Dream." The evening closed with Mr. Wilson in the centre of the circle of friends, and everybody singing, "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow." The invited guests were: Mesdames S. Hughes, J. Sarsiat, R. Porter, J. Molyneux, J. Graham, Misses Hilda Graham, Murial Graham and Joan Graham, and Messrs. E. Sarsiat, R. Porter and A. Matcham.

Miss Iris Couch and Mrs. Stanley Rickinson were joint hostesses at a post-nuptial shower given in honor of Mrs. Bernard Lanning, formerly Miss Dorothy Pattullo, at the home of Miss Couch, 568 Hillside Avenue, on Thursday evening. Baby Joan Simmons presented a bouquet of large yellow chrysanthemums to Mrs. Lanning, who was seated beneath an archway from which was suspended a large white wedding bell flanked with pink and white streamers. A very novel idea for holding the presents was conceived in the form of a miniature Hudson's Bay Company truck, decorated in yellow and green. Mrs Lanning is a member of the Hudson's Bay Company's staff. A feature of the dining-room was a wedding cake topped with miniature bride and groom, the cake being surrounded with white tulle, white candles in silver holders at either side. The supper table was centred with pale pink carnations and fern in a large silver bowl, tall silver vases with carnations in a deeper shade and fern at each end of the table. After the dainty refreshments were served, tea cups were read by Miss Irene Powell and Mrs. M. Pattullo. Miss Couch and Mrs Rickinson were assisted in serving by Miss Flora Jones and Miss Irene Couch. During the evening many interesting pictures taken by Mrs. Rickinson and her husband of scenes from Mexico to Victoria were passed among the guests. Vocal solos were rendered by Mrs. George Clegg and Miss Betty Couch. Among those present were: Mesdames W. Rivers, L. Hill, W Coutts, C. Simmons, M. Pattullo, A. Kennedy, H. Woodford, C. D. Powell A. RETURNED TO SEE CANADA

Mrs. C. L. Paterson, First Here With Overseas Party, Back For Six Months

Mrs. C. L. Paterson of Dalbeattie, Kirkcudbrightshire, Scotland, first came to Canada with an Overseas League party en route to Australia, and she was so impressed with what she saw that she decided to return at the earliest opportunity, stay longer and get to know the country and Canadians better.

For the last six months she has been roaming the country, having crossed the Atlantic by the Duchess of Bedford in June, and is now in Victoria once again. She spent seven weeks in Ottawa and then traveled leisurely west, taking in the mountains, and on reaching the Coast took the Princess Maquinna to Port Alice, where for two weeks she was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. E. Painter.

Mrs. Paterson is interested in the moving picture industry and plans to go on to Hollywood to inspect the studios there after spending a short holiday at the Empress Hotel. She may decide to visit New Zealand before returning to Kirkcudbrightshire.

INDIA BILL EXPLAINED

Harry Gilliland Describes Its Provisions to "Y" Current Events Group

The many points of difference between Dominion status, as enjoyed by Canada, and the measure of autonomy promised India under the new Government of India Bill, were lucidly explained to the Current Events Club of the Y.W.C.A. yesterday afternoon by Harry Gilliland, of the Victoria High School staff.

VICEROY'S POWERS

Under the bill, which will ensure a curious combination of Oriental despotism and British democracy, the Viceroy is given extraordinarily wide powers. To his personal discretion is entrusted such matters as the defence of India, the keeping of peace between its many factions, the adequate provision of pensions for Civil Servants, the protection of minorities, protection against discrimination against British imports, and many other functions.

His Excellency is also given the power to add to the budget, even after it has been considered and passed by the central government, such expenditures as may be warranted in the carrying out of his personal responsibilities, as aforesaid, the speaker noted.

Under Dominion status, the King's representative has none of these autocratic powers. But Mr. Gilliland, before outlining the set-up of the bill, gave something of its background to show the peculiar and complex difficulties which had to be overcome before even this first step on the long road towards the ultimate granting of Dominion status to India could be accomplished.

BRITISH GENIUS PRAISED

Paying tribute to the "marvellous British genius in Colonial administration" as exemplified in India, Mr. Gilliland sketched the almost insurmountable obstacles in the way of true nationhood for this vast country. A heterogeneous conglomeration of races, with about 220 different tongues, and innumerable religion and castes, 71 per cent of its huge population was agrarian and totally out of contact with any democratic influence.

As a further handicap to the welding together of these widely variant people was the inter-communal antagonism between the many religious factions, making India's problem an international, rather than a national one, the speaker pointed out.

He described the apprehension of the Moslem minority as to Hindu aggression, in the event of gradual British withdrawal from India, and spoke of the problem of the 75,000,000 "Untouchables," whose untouchability was firmly rooted in religion, to show the difficulty of reconciling all these divergent attitudes into a cohesive democracy.

GROWING SENTIMENT

Yet in the face of all these apparently overwhelming obstacles, there was a growing sentiment towards nationhood. This was largely attributed to the British insistence on peace between the various factions, and to the teaching, since 1833, of the English tongue and western parliamentary democratic institutions, he maintained.

But the Great War and such "blunders" as the Amritsar incident had aggravated nationalism, said Mr. Gilliland, as he recalled the events leading to the rise of Gandhi and the Nationalist party.

The "diarchy" experiment, started in certain provinces in India in 1919 and viewed with disfavor by many Old Country critics was similar to the system in Canada, before she attained Dominion status. This experiment was favorably reported on by the Simon commission, and the dissatisfaction felt by certain elements in India was subsequently remedied at the round table conference in London, through the co-operation of the great native princes.

Mr. Gilliland enumerated the various stages of the negotiations and the ultimate appointment of the commission under Lord Linlithgow, whose findings led to the drawing up of the Government in India Bill passed in August of this year.

After dealing briefly with the provisions, particularly that giving the vote to women, the speaker expressed the opinion that the elections of 1937 would probably find the machinery "creaky" for a bit, but the sobering influence of responsibility would, perhaps, ensure its ultimate functioning with a measure of success.

In Lord Linlithgow, the Viceroy-designate, India had a friend who through long experience, understood her problems. Interest in the next few years would lie mainly in watching the experiment in the provinces, where the people would have an opportunity to show whether they are statesmen, and whether this great step toward democratic nationhood will justify Britain's hopes, for this vast empire, he concluded.

Mrs. P. B. Scurrah presided.

Your Baby and Mine

By MYRTLE MEYER ELDRED

It is always pathetic to find parents whose interests should be identical, pulling this way and that in an effort to elevate themselves in the child's esteem. It is obvious that, for there to be respect for the parental dictums, the child must see that both parents believe sincerely in them. No child wants to be experimental material for the parent—and if the two parents are in opposition about a programme, the child cannot be expected to accept it as a good one.

Some outsider poses this question for the benefit of two parents whose methods she deplores. Mrs. E. M. H. writes: "Please print something about the father's part in making a fifteen-month-old child mind?

MOTHER CRITICIZES

"In this case every time the father says 'No, no' in a stern, loud tone, the mother says, 'Don't speak like that,' and then the child begins to cry. The mother is always reminding the father in front of the child that he should not do this or that, because it will make the child 'nervous.'

"Now my question is: Who will make the child more nervous, the father who is trying to teach the child something or the mother who is always bickering with the father?" The child cries every time the father speaks to her and then goes to the mother for sympathy, and the grandmother sides with her."

DO NOT ARGUE

The question seems to be not the child's nervousness but the bad habits it is learning. Having discovered that tears and an appeal to the mother prevent him obeying the father, the child uses this constantly. One cannot wholeheartedly commend a father for using a loud voice in offering his suggestions to the child, as there are obviously more mannerly ways of getting his ideas across, but certainly it is not a matter to be argued out in front of the child.

The father's intention is good, the mother's is less so, since her objective seems to be to turn the child from the father to her, regardless of what happens to the child's respect for the father's orders.

From such a sketchy account one is in no position to judge whether the father expects too much of a fifteen-month-old child, but if there is to be any regard for what the parent says, both parents have to be in agreement before they can expect the child to pay heed to their orders.

We have some leaflets which might be helpful to the parents. One is "How to Be a Good Father." Others are "Dealing With the Child's Curiosity and "Wise Management of the Child." Any or all of these may be had for a self-addressed and three-cent stamped envelope sent to Myrtle Meyer Eldred of the "Your Baby and Mine Department" of this newspaper.

PERSONS AND EVENTS IN THE NEWS

WHERE EGYPTIANS RIOT

Ancient Cairo rang with the cries of rioting mobs and the staccatto explosion of wad-charged police guns as students surged through its streets in a sudden outburst of anti-British resentment. The minarets of a church dominate this air view of the city.

BIKE TEAM OF PEDEN AND PEDEN

In all probability followers of indoor bicycle racing in the big eastern cities next winter will see the Peden-Peden team riding for honors. This, it is said, will be the first time on record that two brothers have teamed up for the tough grind. The above picture gives a good idea of the perfect team they will make. Torchy is on the left and Doug on the right. Torchy is the six-day champion and weighs 220 pounds. Doug, who is known in local circles as one of the best athletes in Victoria, is younger and lighter than his brother, but tips the scales at 190 pounds. Torchy is visiting his parents here now and is giving Doug a few more tips on riding.

TWILIGHT

THE SUSPENSE IS SUSTAINED

The dramatic critics who bemoan the lack of sustained suspense in lightly regarded shows they review ought to have been present at Dresden, Germany, while this locomotive hung precariously above the roadway. The bridge sagged when the locomotive crossed it, but fortunately for the many persons in the coaches, the steel structure didn't break, so no one was killed.

ROMANCE BLOSSOMS ABROAD

The paths of Mary Brian and Charles "Buddy" Rogers probably crossed many times in Hollywood, but not until they went to England to make a movie did their interest in each other become more than casual. That look in Rogers's eye as they side side by side in a studio at Hertfordshire, England, lends strength to the report that they are engaged to marry.

VAST THRONG OF 100,000 HAILS HUSKING CHAMP

Overtaxing reception facilities prepared for months before, a vast throng of 100,000 "fans" tramped down fences and cornstalks to see Elmer Carlson, right, win the national corn-husking championship near Newton, Ind. Carlson, who is twenty-six and hails from Audubon, Ia., set a new record at 41.52 bushels and won a $100 prize and unlimited applause from the enthusiastic crowd.

TIME FOR HORSEPLAY IS SHORT

French groom polishes saddle for an appearance in the ring.

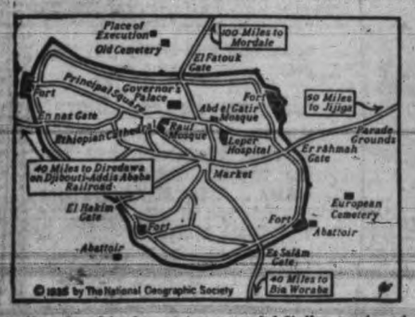
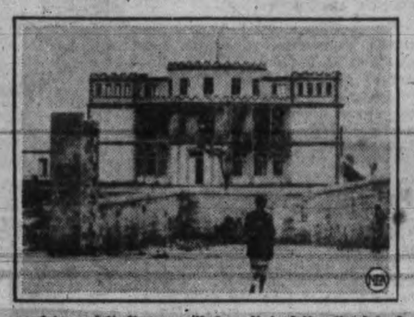
There was a behind-the-screen world at the National Horse Show in New York in which 500 handsome steeds from all over the country and many foreign lands starred in Madison Square Garden. Here the camera gives you a glimpse into the busy precincts where the entries restively await their call to the arena. Something of the endless work that goes on in the basement of the Garden and in under the grandstand stalls is suggested by the feeding, grooming and polishing pictured above.

HARAR, KEY TO ETHIOPIA'S RAILWAY, TREMBLES AS ITALIANS ADAVNCE





A city gripped by fear as two powerful Italian armies advanced toward it, Harar, walled capital of the district of the same name in eastern Ethiopia, is shown in the top photo. The map indicates the principal points within and without the walls and the highways that lead toward other important cities. At the right below is shown the palace of the governor.

DEATH PLEA STIRS STORM

Plea of Miss Anna Becker, above, that a doctor end her life "in the name of mercy" stirred emphatic protests from physicians that the act would be murder, legally and ethically. The thirty-four-year-old Buffalo, N.Y., nurse, injured two years ago in an auto crash, declared she is in constant agony and a burden on her friends.

APPEAL TO AID PRAIRIE CHURCH

Diocese Will Contribute to Alleviate Privation Among Clergy

At a recent meeting held by the Bishop of Columbia to discuss the distressing conditions at present prevailing among church people on the Prairies, it was decided this diocese would endeavour to take its share in the sacrifices and privations at present being undertaken by the church in some of the western dioceses.

To this end the meeting decided to set apart St. Andrew's Day, Saturday, November 30, as a day when the free-will offerings of the people of the diocese will be presented to enable the church in distressed areas to carry on its work. The objective is for each parish to pay its regular apportionment to the Missionary Society in full, and in addition, the diocese as a whole will attempt to contribute the sum of $3,000 to be sent as a gift to the Bishop of Saskatchewan for the use of his clergy, many of whom, though married, are receiving only a dollar a day in salary.

The gifts to be made on St. Andrew's Day are to be taken to the various parish churches in the diocese where the clergy will be in attendance at stated hours to receive them. Where the gifts cannot be brought on that day, they may be paced in special envelopes and placed in the collections made on the following Sunday. The method being adopted for the receiving of people's gifts for this appeal is one which is at times adopted by the church in England, when special appeals are made for urgent calls on the financial resources of the people, gifts, no matter how small, being gratefully received. It is felt that an opportunity will in this way be presented to the people of this diocese to share in heroic labors of the clergy on the prairies.

THEOSOPHICAL CLUB

The Victoria Theosophical Club will meet on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Theosophical Hall, 204 Jones Building, Fort Street.

The topic will be "Evolution From the Theosophical Standpoint," which will be considered not only from its physical aspect but mentally and spiritually also.

AUTOMOBILE CLUB NOTES

The C.P.R. has reserved the northeast end of Belleville Street docks for private cars meeting incoming steamers. This co-operation was secured when the question of the bad parking conditions in that vicinity was brought up at the last meeting of safety committee of the Victoria Automobile Club, when Capt. T. J. Goodlake, secretary, was authorized to write a letter to the company.

The Victoria Automobile Club reports that membership receipts are ahead so far this year. September was above average, October was even and November is, up to this point, ahead. It is pointed out, however, that there are still plenty of vacancies left.

A map has been obtained by the local club showing latest detours made necessary due to reconstruction work on the North Central United States highways. This map will be at the convenience of the members of the club, who are contemplating a trip in that vicinity.

A meeting has been called for the directors of the Victoria Automobile Club on Monday evening at 8 o'clock in room 6, Winch Building. The directors will consider the communication received from the Alberta Motor Association, which suggests that the forthcoming conference of provincial premiers which is to be held in Ottawa, be a good opportunity to induce the federal government to assume the responsibility of the upkeep and construction of the main highways in the four western provinces.

APPEALS FOR MISSION AID

United Church Leaders Address Two Congregations in City on Work

Appeals to assist in the mission work of the United Church in Canada, with particular reference to the need for relief doceses of the Prairies were made before two local church congregations by Rev. R. B. Cochrane, home mission secretary, and Very Rev. James Endicott, D.D., former moderator.

Dr. Cochrane spoke at Fairfield United and Dr. Endicott at Centennial.

The ideal of Christian unity was the union of all who love in the service of all who suffer, Dr. Cochrane said. He expressed his hope for an ultimate united Protestant church in Canada and, in time, a reunited Christendom.

The churches must devote themselves to becoming the spirit of Jesus in order to make the soul of Canada Christian. He spoke of the relief which had been afforded in the Prairie dioceses where hundreds of carloads of food and clothing had been sent by churches of eastern Canada and British Columbia. This work, he said, had done much to draw the Dominion together.

Rev. Dr. E. A. Henry presided over the meeting.

FIELDS ARE CHANGED

Dr. Endicott conducted his audience on an imaginary tour of the world, touching at mission centres, and showing the remarkable transformation which had followed the introduction of Christianity in the various fields.

The speaker deplored the fact that the United Church foreign missions budget had been cut to $100,000, which was less than had ever been spent in the history of the church.

It had resulted in the calling home of medical men and missionaries.

TELLS BASIS OF INSURANCE

Canada Favored By Circumstances, G. H. Garrett Tells Real Estate Board

The success of the life insurance business in Canada was stressed to members of the Real Estate Board at their luncheon in Spencer's dining-room yesterday by G. H. Garrett, who explained to them the basic principles on which the structure of the business is founded.

Through the low average age and excellent health of its population, said Mr. Garrett, and through favorable investment rates the insurance companies of Canada had up to depression years stood in a favored position. The depression had taught them to economize and rationalize.

All life insurance, said Mr. Garrett, was mutual in principle. Even the companies which were not mutual in constitution were forced by statute to return all profits over a set percentage to their policy holders

PREMIUMS

Dealing with the main elements of life insurance, Mr. Garrett first considered the question of premiums. These, he said, depended on the form of policy, the age of the man who was taking out the policy and his value as a risk.

The premiums for the first year and one-half to two years were almost completely absorbed in commissions to agent, office expenses and the like. This factor, known as "loading" was taken care of in the calculation of the premium.

The mortality rate was at the base of the whole premium calculation. While it was not possible to estimate the expectation of life of any one individual, it was possible to calculate very accurately how many out of a large group would die each year. Special tables, approved by statute, were provided for the purpose.

Between 20 and 30 per cent of every premium, he said, went into commission, office expenses, salaries and the working costs of the company.

RESERVE

The balance was used to form a reserve and a surplus which went to the policyholders or stockholders.

In the Dominion of Canada companies were compelled by law to compute their premiums on the basis of an investment return of not more than 3½ per cent, while often they could benefit by returns of 5 or 6 per cent. This provided absolute safety for the policyholder.

The reserve, as well as providing for payments and for investments, took care of the unexpected, in the form of wars, epidemics and investment losses and heavy loan and surrender demands in time of depression.

In the matter of investments, North American companies had the advantage over their European counterparts through the high interest and mortgage rates prevailing.

DIFFERENT POLICIES

Mr. Garrett explained the differences between the various forms of policies.

Term policies were for fixed and fairly brief periods, and after their expiry the holder had no rights at all. As a result this was the cheapest form to obtain. Whole life policies paid a set sum at death in return for straight premiums during the whole life.

Limited pay life policies, which paid at death after receipt of premiums over a limited period, were not to be confused with endowments, in which the payment could be collected at the end of the period in which premiums were paid.

Mr. Garrett also mentioned trust policies, providing annuities to beneficiaries, and group insurance for employees in companies.

Following Mr. Garrett's address members of the board joined in a round-table discussion of insurance, with J. W. Hudson and Alderman Alex Peden speaking briefly.

Mr. Hudson explained the difference between mutual companies and others, and Mr. Peden stated that the tendency during the years of depression for people to take out term policies was now ended, indicating a generally better financial situation.

Garden City

Garden City women's auxiliary held their monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. W. Armstrong, Gladiola Avenue, on Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. A. P. Fryatt presiding. Reports on the knitting contest and lecture by Mrs. E. Jamieson were presented by the secretary and treasurer. Arrangements were made for a bazaar to be held in the church, Carey Road, on Thursday, December 5.

Mrs. Fryatt, on behalf of the ladies, presented Miss M. Thompson with a testimonial and small gift on the occasion of her departure for Ottawa. The next meeting will be held Wednesday, December 18 at the parsonage, Glyn Road. Refreshments were served at the close of the meeting by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. W. Hoy.

STORIES IN STAMPS

By I. S. Klein

EL CAPITAN

MILLIONS of years ago, a large mass of molten rock forced its way up through the interior of the earth, cooled slowly just below the surface, and crystallized into hard, mineral-dotted granite. Rivers cut away the softer surface until the hard rock was revealed.

Thus arose the mightly canyon of the Yosemite Valley. Later, glaciers born of the Ice Age chiseled deeper into this rock, until now the valley digs its way more than 3,000 feet below the top of the original stone.

Standing as on guard over this steep canyon is "El Capitan," stalwart rock of granite rising a sheer 3,600 feet above the Merced River, its summit 7,564 feet above sea level. This magnificent cliff was the first natural masterpiece to be pictured on the series of United States stamps issued in 1934 to publicize the beauty of America's national parks. It is on the one cent stamp.

GROUPERS WILL GO TO DUNCAN

Teams From Victoria Also to Speak at Cobble Hill on Sunday

Oxford Group teams from Victoria will go up to Cobble Hill and Duncan on Sunday. About forty are expected to make the trip.

In the morning, at the invitation of the respective ministers, small teams will speak at Duncan United Church, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Duncan, and St. John's Anglican Church, Cobble Hill.

These forty groupers, it is stated, represent a real cross-section of society from naval and military officers, church wardens and Sunday school leaders to unemployed and ex-Communists. They will tell what vital Christianity has done for them personally.

Some who have recently returned from working on Oxford Group teams in Europe and the United States will tell of the world-wide scope of the movement.

Scottish Champs Are Defeated By Only Goal Scored

SUNDERLAND IN ODD GOAL WIN

Canadian Press

Glasgow, Nov. 23.—Rangers, Scottish League champions and cup-holders, suffered a severe setback to-day when they were defeated 1 to 0 by Aberdeen at Pittodrie. As a result of their victory the Dons and Celtic are now the outstanding contenders for championship honors this season. The Celts won 2 to 0 at Ayr and are now only one point behind Aberdeen in the race.

Rangers hold third place with twenty-six points, six less than the Dons.

Hearts and Motherwell both won away from home. The Edinburgh club obtained a narrow 4 to 3 victory over Hamilton Academicals and Motherwell defeated Hibernians 3 to 2. Dunfermline turned in a 1 to 0 victory over Third Lanark and Clyde gained a similar decision at the expense of Kilmarnock.

In other games Arbroath won 1 to 0 from Dundee; St. Johnstone were successful at Albion Rovers 2 to 1 and Partick Thistle defeated Airdrionians 3 to 1 at Hampden Park.

One-goal margins gave St. Mirren and Falkirk, second divisions leaders, maximum points against Morton and St. Bernards. The Paisley outfit were on the long end of a 5 to 4 score an Falkirk won 3 to 2. Alloa defeated East Fife 2 to 1 to go into a tie with St. Bernards for fourth place in the table.

London, Nov. 23—Defeating Middlesbrough 2 to 1 at Roker Park, Sunderland to-day retained its lead in the English Football League. By winning 2 to 1 at West Bromwich, Huddersfield Town nosed out Derby County for second place. The County was held to a scoreless draw by Liverpool.

Arsenal went into fourth place with a 4 to 0 victory over Wolverhampton Wanderers at Highbury. Aston Villa drew 2 to 2 with Birmingham before a great crowd at St. Andrews.

Everton performed in unexpected style at Grimsby getting a 4 to 0 verdict from the fishermen while Manchester City improved its position by a 3 to 0 victory over Sheffield Wednesday, the English cupholders, at Maine Road.

In the second division Tottenham Hotspurs, who took top ranking a week ago, succumbed to Southampton 2 to 0 at the Dell while Leicester City, playing at home, overcame Plymouth Argyle 2 to 0. The City takes first place with a one-point margin over the Spurs.

Reading went under 4 to 0 at Watford but its lead in the southern section of the third division is not in danger. In the northern section Tranmere Rovers blasted Chester's hopes for leadership, temporarily at least, by winning 3 to 1.

TORONTO WILL MEET MAROONS

Last Year's Stanley Cup Hockey Finalists Clash This Evening

The Stanley Cup finalists of last spring will undergo a double test over the week-end, but first and most important they will renew National Hockey League hostilities.

The Maple Leafs and Montreal Maroons come together to-night in Toronto, with the Leafs intent upon flattening the Redmen who trounced them three straight in the 1935 Stanley Cup series. More than 12,000 are expected to watch the struggle.

To-morrow night, Maroons will engage the unbeaten Black Hawks at Chicago, while the Leafs play the Red Wings in Detroit. In each case the Canadian team will be the underdog, if for no other reason than its tiring work playing twice in two nights.

Buoyed up by an overtime victory over Detroit, New York Americans tackle the fleet Canadiens in Montreal to-night. The other Sunday night contest brings together Boston Bruins and New York Rangers at Boston.

CITY HIGH WINS RUGBY

Defeats Oak Bay 15 to 3 in Deciding Game For Russell Trophy

Defeating Oak Bay High School 15 to 3 yesterday on the Fernwood Road ground, Victoria High School won the best out of three series and retained the prized Howard Russell rugby trophy for players under 150 pounds.

Victoria had won the first game 6 to 3. The second was a tie, 3 to 3, and yesterday's game decided the series in favor of Victoria.

In spite of the bad weather, there was a large crowd out to see the game and the spectators were rewarded with a good exhibition. Although the Victoria team piled up nine points in the first half and had the better of the first session, Oak Bay staged a magnificent rally in the second half, particularly in the last ten minutes, during which time J. Davey got across the line for their lone try.

The next three points were scored by Cosier, who kicked a fine place kick over the bar from forty yards out.

DALZELL OPENS SCORING

The first try was scored by Tom Dalzell when he fell on the ball after the Victoria pack had pushed over the Oak Bay's line from a scrum three yards out. Cosier's kick was wide.

The next try was scored ten minutes after this when Doheny dribbled the ball over the line and downed it. Cosier's kick hit the top of the post but failed to bounce between for the extra points.

The next try was scored by Brown at the end of a twenty-yard run after he had received the ball from a smart three-quarter movement. Cosier's try for the extra points was unsuccessful.

The most spectacular play of the game was made early in the second half by Cosier and Brown. Cosier received the ball on the halfway line and ran past the twenty-five-yard line, where he passed to Brown, who scored under the cross-bar. Cosier missed the kick.

KICKS GOAL

Ten minutes before the whistle, J. Davey received the ball after a scrum and crossed the line for the Oak Bay team's lone tally. H. Clarke's kick was wide.

Oak Bay pressed the Victoria team for the remainder of the game, but could not crash through. A free kick by Clarke was wide.

The teams follow:

Oak Bay—S. Davies, H. Clarke, V. Miller, H. McDonald and G. Clarke; G. Murdoch and M. Murray; H. Brown, T. Pidcock, P. Palin, F. Ward, J. Davey, R. McKay, M. Ley and S. Yates.

Victoria High—B. Winbsy, B. Brown, W. Fricker, J. Cosier and F. Smith; E. Barber and R. Cosier; J. Russell, D. Bray, C. Lanigan, T. Dalzell, C. Miller, I. Elliot, P. Doheny and J. Lanigan.

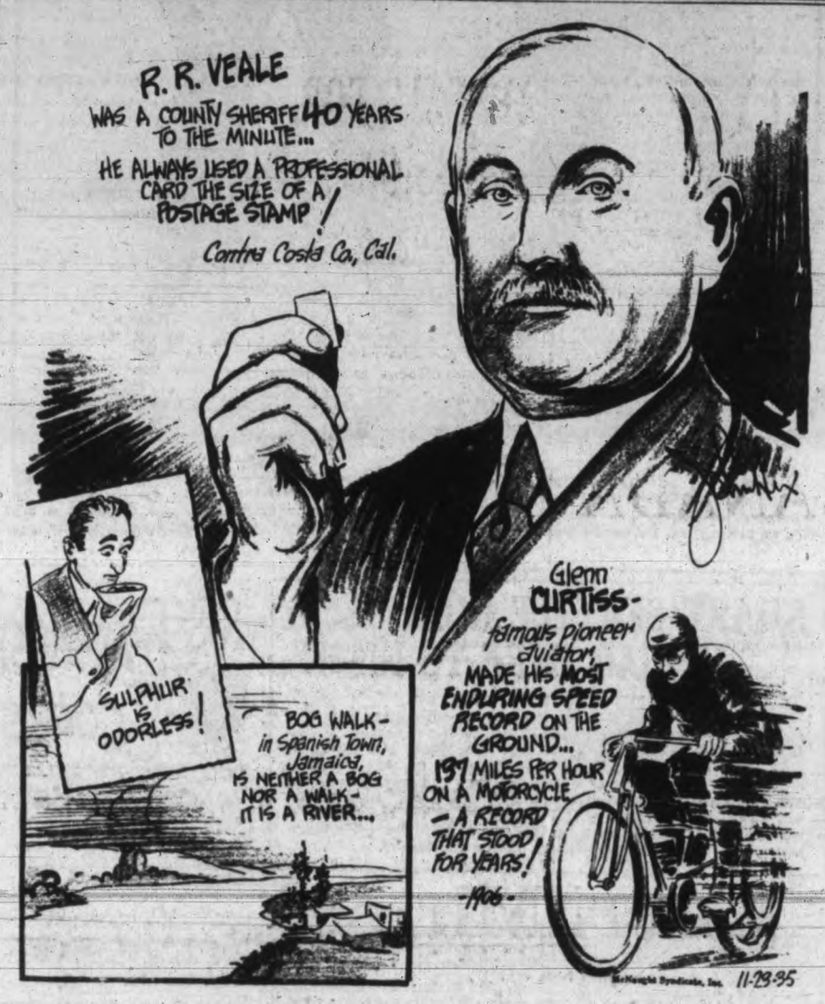
STRANGE AS IT SEEMS —By John Hix



Glenn Curtiss, who won his fame as a pioneer in man's newest and fastest mode of travel—aviation—set his first and most enduring record for speed on the ground. Curtiss began his racing achievements with an interest in bicycles. He won several of these races before he designed and built a motorcycle which, in 1903, set an all-time record for speed for all types of conveyances—a speed of 136 miles per hour.

The success he gained in building small but powerful gasoline motors led to his interest in the problems of the infant aviation industry, where motors of this type were especially needed. His success in that line is well known. In 1908 he won the Scientific American Trophy; in 1909 the Gordon Bennett Cup; and in 1910 a $10,000 prize for a flight from Albany to New York. He invented the flying boat, and in 1919 a ship of this type crossed the Atlantic to establish a record as first to ever make that flight.

R. R. Veale became sheriff of Contra Costa County, California, at the stroke of noon on January 7, 1895, and through this election and nine subsequent re-elections, he served forty years to the minute. He left office just as the clock struck noon on January 7 this year.

The ... Sports Mirror ... By L. M. S.

REFEREE three seasons ago of a national final between Victoria Blue Ribbons and Windsor-Walkerville Alumni and now just a student official. Believe it or not, that is the rating held by Tommy Macedo, long a whistle-tooter in local cage engagements. Last Saturday evening Macedo made his first appearance this season at the High School on the card featuring the Dominoes-Seattle K. of C. battle, and he stepped onto the floor as a student. Fred Harding, who worked with Macedo, was the approved official in charge. What could be more foolish? One season an official is thought highly enough of to work in a Canadian series, and then he can slip down to become a student at the profession. Apparently Macedo will remain a student until he passes his written examinations.

• • • •

The referee question in the Victoria and District Basketball League is not all just a bed of roses, according to whispers I hear around those places where the officials and basketeers gather for their daily powwows. It appears that some of the boys who trot around in white pants and exercise their lungs on the little silver toofers are not satisfied with working their regular turns, but want all the cream all the time. As far as the league is concerned, all they are called upon to do is to name an approved referee for their games. And they can name whom they wish. A student can officiate with another approved official.

Just dawned on me what a tough time the players in the National Hockey League experience if they decide to become holdouts for higher wages. In baseball, for instance, holdout players have the club owners to deal with, but in hockey the disgruntled members deal with the owners for so long and then they have President Frank Calder to talk to. And the canny club owners of hockey long ago elected Calder, a gentleman of Scottish ancestry, to represent them, and he has not betrayed their trust. Another way in which the baseballers have an advantage over the hockeyists is that there is no limit to wages on the diamond, whereas the cold-hearted hockey moguls have set a limit of $7,000 on individual salaries. That is, for players. If there is any limit for club owners or officials they have not yet made it public.

In this connection I figure Earl Siebert and Calder must be getting quite chummy over salary conferences. It was weeks ago that Lester Patrick, manager of the New York Rangers, dumped the Seibert case in Calder's lap. Calder and Seibert get together and go over money matters each fall. It's true that so far Seibert has always reached the settlement stage and went out and played for what he could get. This season, however, he has proven obstinate and is still on the sidelines.

President W. A. Fry of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada made a wise move when he, with the approval of the other members of his executive, lifted the wholesale suspension placed on every player in the Interprovincial Rugby Football Union and every player who had performed against the Ottawa Rough Riders this season, by the Ottawa branch. The suspension was put through because the Ottawa amateur heads thought Roy Berry, who had played with the Riders, is John Hilliard, formerly of University of

KLICK BACK IN PICTURE

Becomes Leading Lightweight Challenger Following Win Over Al Roth

New York, Nov. 23. — Frankie Klick, San Francisco veteran, bounced back into the middle of the lightweight picture to-day by virtue of a decision over youthful Al Roth, New York.

Weighing 133¼, Klick won the unanimous decision in ten rounds, before 1,500 persons who paid approximately $15,000 to see the fray. Roth weighed 134½.

It may have been strategy, but Klick looked like a badly beaten fighter at the start. He was knocked down for a count of nine with a piston-like right to the jaw in the second and slipped to the floor later in the same heat as Roth, both fists going, chased him around the ring.

But with the end of the fourth Roth faded almost entirely out of the picture. Klick opened up with a barrage of rights to capture the next six chapters. There were no more knockdowns, but the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth were parades for Klick. He used his right to wear down the New Yorker and his left to completely bottle up Roth's hurricane attack of the early stages.

The victory was Klick's seventh straight in the Garden.

Browne-Cave Beats Washington Champ

Victoria Table Tennis Star in Brilliant Win Over Akira Hoshide in International Tournament at Crystal Garden; Finals To-night

Wilmot Browne-Cave, Victoria city champion, rose to new heights of celluloid fame when he trounced Akira Hoshide, Japanese star and No. 1 ranking player in Seattle, in straight sets during the quarter final of the men's open singles at the international table tennis tournament in the Crystal Garden yesterday evening.

Only Ray Pearson, sensational twelve-year-old schoolboy "prodigy," remains in the running for the invaders, but he is a distinct threat as he beat Vic Tulley, high ranking local player, by three sets to one in another quarter final match.

FINALS TO-NIGHT

To-night the semi-finals and finals of both the men's open and consolation singles will be played along with doubles matches.

The first game of the singles will see Browne-Cave pitted against Lionel Cox, last year's runner-up in the Victoria city championship, while in the other bracket, Bill Whittingham, Victoria, former English county star, will take on Pearson.

One of the largest crowds in the city's ping-pong history witnessed yesterday's play-offs. With improved lighting the cash customers witnessed scintillating displays of the table game.

In the feature match Hoshide went to the table as the favorite after his impressive victory over Crombie. He beat the Royal Arcanum player in three straight and seemed to be taking it easy. However, in his eagerness to gain points quickly, the Japanese netted often. His timing also seemed to be off, whereas Browne-Cave was at the top of his form. Some of his saves when he picked balls out of the air ten and fifteen feet behind the table drew gasps from the galleries.

BRILLIANT DEFENCE

Hoshide started off cautiously and seemed to be feeling out the local player. He soon began to force the game, and Browne-Cave defended brilliantly chopping and slicing and forcing the Seattle star to net. The city champion ran up an early lead which he held to win 21-13.

The Japanese player again forced the game driving hard to the corners. Time and again he slashed three and four balls in a row, only to have them come back to him. Browne-Cave's backwrist flip was working well and he scored many points with this shot. After see-sawing from side to side, Browne-Cave drew ahead to win 21 to 18.

The last game was the closest, with the Japanese putting all he had into it. His drives were more effective, but his backhand fell down. The city champion also opened up and pulled off some fine forehand slashes. Hoshide was leading all the way, but Browne-Cave pulled up and made it nineteen all going on to win the last two crucial points and the match.

Pearson got a big hand from the crowd in his game with Tulley. After a long battle which saw four deuces, the Victoria player won the first game, but the youngster took the next with ease, and carried the other two in his stride. Pearson displayed an excellent variety of shots and deadly accuracy. Previously the boy star had disposed of Stursberg, local player, in three straight sets.

AN UPSET

The early upset of the tournament saw Eric Cox seeded among the first four go down to defeat at the hands of Ian Eisenhardt, Vancouver player. The local player took the first two sets easily and seemed to have the game in hand, but the terminal city star got into his stride and cinched the match.

Eisenhardt, however, fell down to Ray Simpson, Victoria College player, and Simpson was himself defeated in three straight sets by Whittingham.

Results follow:

Halifax, Nov. 23.—Adjudged Canada's outstanding athlete of the year, pretty Aileen Meagher, Halifax sprinter, yesterday evening was awarded the Norton H. Crowe Memorial prize at the annual meeting of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada.

The only others nominated, Henry "Hank" Cleman, Toronto, Canadian walking champion, and W. "Scotty" Rankine, Preston, Ont., marathoner, were eliminated by the selection committee and the name of the Halifax flash was the only one put before the convention.

Earlier in the week Miss Meagher received the Velma Springstead Memorial award from the Women's Amateur Athletic Federation as the outstanding woman athlete.

The selection committee for the Crowe award was made up of President W. A. Fry, chairman; Secretary John Leslie and representatives of each branch of the union.

In announcing the winner, President Fry said Miss Meagher's sensational dashes at the British Empire Games contributed largely to the award.

New Zealand All-blacks Win First International Rugby Clash

Touring Players Defeat Scotland By 18 to 8 Edge

SCOTS PUT UP GAME STRUGGLE

Edinburgh, Nov. 23.—New Zealand defeated Scotland 18 to 8 before a crowd of 40,000 at Murrayfield to-day in the first international game of its Old Country rugby tour. The match was played under ideal conditions and although the Scots opened the scoring they were behind 13 to 3 at half-time.

After a week of bad weather conditions were ideal for the match and the field on the soft side. The spacious enclosure was filled to capacity.

The Scots thrilled the crowd with a great rush immediately after the start, getting away from a midfield scrum, and Gilbert had to run his hardest to save. Continuing to attack Scotland scored after fifteen minutes. Dick cut through in brilliant fashion and passed to Fyfe, who outpaced the defence and went over. Fyfe failed to convert.

MURDOCK INJURED

Murdoch, Scottish three-quarter, was injured midway through the first half and forced to retire. The All-Blacks pressed strongly, only a great tackle by Thom preventing them from crossing the home line.

Fine kicking by the visiting backs gave them the advantage, and after a bout of magnificent passing Caughey went over for a try. Gilbert added the extra points. Murdoch resumed, but the All-Blacks proved the superior side.

After some hard scrimmaging in the Scottish twenty-five-yard area, Hadley rushed across for New Zealand's second tally, and again Gilbert converted. Scotland rallied, and Logan made a great effort, but the move was nullified when Dick failed to pass when tackled. Just before half-time, Caughey scored again, but the try was not converted.

Rallying strongly in the second forty-five minutes of play, Scotland made the famous All-Blacks go all out for victory, and until the last ten minutes either side might have won. The tussle recalled the last meeting between the two countries at Inverleith in 1905, when the tourists came from behind in the closing minutes, scoring two tries and winning, 12 to 7.

SCORES THREE TRIES

Caughey, clever five-eighth, was the outstanding player of to-day's game, going over for three of his side's four tries. Hadley scored the other. Gilbert, in great form, converted three of the tries, Dick crossed twice for Scotland, one in each half. Murdoch converted the second try from in front of the posts.

The All-Blacks deserved their lead at the interval. They made the most of their oportunities and wasted few passes. After the change of ends it was a different story, with the Scots on the attack until ten minutes from the end. Forward, the home team was the equal of the heavy New Zealand pack, but the three-quarters were guilty of many mistakes, and their opponents profited considerably from frequent wild passes.

Superior combination by the All-Blacks won the day. In addition to Caughey, the tourists' outstanding players were Sadler, Mitchell, Hart, Manchester and Reid.

IDA S. WINS TO PAY WELL

Victoria Horse Takes Feature at Bay Meadows Track; Returns $29.20

San Mateo, Cal., Nov. 23.—Coming down the stretch with a terrific burst of sped, Ida S., owned by Tom McGeachan, Victoria, won yesterday's feature race at Bay Meadows track. It was run over one mile and seventy yards. The time was 1.44.

Merril Wilber, seventeen-year-old jockey, was aboard the winner. He held Ida S. off the pace until the stretch. The chocolate filly responded nicely in the final drive to win going away by a length.

Chica set the pace, closely attended by Battling Knight, the favorite. They finished second and third in that order.

Ida S., lightly regarded, paid off $29.20, $12.20 and $4.20. Chica returned $6.00 and $3.20 and Battling Knight $2.40.

On the left is Herbie Cain who is back on the third line of the Montreal Maroons in the National Hockey League and playing good hockey. At the right is Stew Evans, husky defenceman, who developed a mild case of holding out for awhile but soon came to terms when he found out the world champions were ready to open the season without him.

SMART SEATTLE HOOP SQUAD HERE TO-NIGHT

Smart sharp-shooters from the Sound City will provide Victoria's Dominoes, Canadian hoop champions, with lots of opposition in the feature basketball exhibition at Victoria High School gym this evening. The Seattle boys, wearing the uniforms of the Gilt Tops, include a pair of University of Washington stars of former seasons, as well as leading performers secured from other teams. Doug Peden will return to the court in this evening's fray for the Dominoes who will be at full strength for the encounter. Two preliminary games, the first at 7.15 o'clock, will precede the feature.

Texas, and a semi-pro baseballer. They could not decide definitely, though, whether Berry is Hilliard. Hilliard is Berry, or if the Rough Rider star is either of the players named.

Here is a group of amateur officials, supposedly interested in fostering and furthering sport in Canada, who, because suspicion had crept into their minds, immediately wanted to bar from amateur sport every player in the Big Four and every members of Queen's University team, which played an exhibition game with the Riders. These officials placed blame for Berry's playing throughout an entire season on the shoulders of some 150 players. Without any good proof they wanted these good, clean-cut athletes, the majority of them Canadians, thrown out of sport. It is just another example of how the autocratic A.A.U. of this country does business. Why was Berry's status not investigated at the beginning of the season and not at the end? But I must say President Fry showed a lot of good common sense in getting the suspension lifted within twelve hours. Otherwise the A.A.U. might have lost the affiliation of another line of sport.

November Handicap Won By Free Fare

B. Warner's 22 to 1 Choice Captures Classic at Manchester By Five Lengths Over Trapston; Jesmond Dene Third; Nineteen Starters

Canadian Press

Manchester, Nov. 23.—B. Warner's Free Fare to-day won the Manchester November Handicap by five lengths from Lord Derby's Trapston. Lady Fitzwilliam's Jesmond Dene was third, a length and a half behind Trapston. Sammy Wragg rode Free Fare, a 22 to 1 chance.

Nineteen ran. Free Fare won about $7,500 for Warner.

Gordon Richardson, the champion jockey, obeying Lord Ivor Churchill's orders to try for a win by leading the whole way, took Chrysler II in front from the start, and was soon clear of Free Fare, and Crawley Wood, the favorite at 7 to 5.

Entering the straight Chrysler II still led Bacchus, Samarkand, Free Fare, Astyana, Jesmond and Trapston. Richards's daring bid for a run-way looked like succeeding.

A furlong and one-half from home, Chrysler II suddenly weakened and fell back, a beaten horse.

Free Fare swept to the front in the easiest fashion and was five lengths to the good at the post. The time for the mile-and-one-half course was 2 minutes 43 1-5 seconds.

J. B. Walker's Bacchus was fourth. K. E. Cottrell's Crawley Wood, F. Lane up, proved a great disappointment, never seriously challenging Chrysler II or the winner.

SHARKEY WINS NOVEL FIGHT

Former Heavyweight Champ Knocks Out "Unknown" Winston Twice at Boston

Boston, Nov. 23.—Jack Sharkey was safely past the first milepost in his campaign to regain the heavyweight title to-day, victor in a strange contest which he won by two knockouts.

In his first appearance in Boston in seven years Sharkey bowled over Eddie "Unknown" Winston, Hartford negro, for the count of ten twice in six minutes and ten seconds of battling before 12,470 persons in Boston Garden yesterday evening.

A minute and ten seconds of the first round had gone when the cautious Winston was felled by two uppercuts. Referee Johnny Martin counted Winston out and then, supported by one of the judges, accused the negro of not trying and declared the fray no contest.

The crowd roared its protest and Sharkey, through his manager, appealed to members of the State Boxing Commission to allow Winston a fresh start. Commissioner Daniel J. Kelly consented.

The negro was more aggressive as the second first round began but after two or three light jabs apparently lost his courage.

Sharkey dropped Winston twice in the second session — once for the count of nine and the second time, at the two-minute mark, for the ten count.

LONDON TAKES FIVE STRAIGHT

New "Kid" Line Leads Minor Hockey League Club to Win Over Pittsburgh

Windsor, Ont., Nov. 23—Big-league scouts turned their eyes on a new sensational "kid" line to-day as they checked over London Tecumsehs record of five straight wins in the International Hockey League and decided the youngsters were the chief reason for the spurt that carried Tecs to the top of the eastern section.

The fancy-skating trio of Walter Brenneman, Joffre Deslets and Ray Getliffe, freshmen from amateur ranks, delivered in the pinch yesterday evening to help London mark up a 5 to 2 victory over the Pittsburgh Shamrocks at Pittsburgh.

COAST HOCKEY TEAMS IN TIE

Edmonton Eskimos and Vancouver Lions Battle to 2 to 2 Deadlock

Vancouver, Nov. 23.—Edmonton Eskimos, making their first appearance on coast ice, held the Vancouver Lions to a 2 to 2 overtime tie at the Arena yesterday evening. The result left the Eskimos one point behind Calgary in third place and kept the champion Lions the same margin in the rear of Portland Buckaroos, league leaders of the Northwest Hockey League.

Dyck, Palm and Sheppard, Vancouver's second string line, were storming the Edmonton net and had the brilliant McCusker, Eskimo goalie, giving a display of gymnastics when Ronnie Martin broke away, outmanoeuvred the defence and slipped a perfect pass to Mory Rimstad, who beat Clark from close in.

PENALTY SHOT

The second period lacked some of the speed of the first but was enlivened by a penalty shot, charged against the Edmonton netminder for holding the puck too long. Frank Frederickson, the referee, and Ronnie Martin had a lengthy argument over the decision, which finally brought forth a rule book and loud-voiced protests from the crowd.

Starting the third period Ron Martin missed a chance to put his team in the lead when he took Mory Rimstad's pass at the Vancouver blue line with nobody but Clark to beat. Clark sprawled on the ice to rob the former New York American player.

O'Neill scored his second goal on a pass-out from Sheppard from behind the net to give the Lions the lead for the first time. Edmonton were short handed at the time and Vancouver had applied the power play.

With Eskimos still short handed it took Carriere just twenty-four seconds to even the count. Taking the puck at his own blue line he outsped the Vancouver defence to beat Clark cleanly for the final goal of the game.

Teams follow:

Edmonton — McCusker, Townsend, Mercer, Holmes, Whittles and Carse. Subs: Martin, Rimstad, Carriere and A. Gray.

Referee—Frank Frederickson.

B.C. Branch A.A.U. Faces Suspension

Coast Group Along With Eastern Ontario and Thunder Bay Sections Must Pay Dues and Arrears Within Specified Time; Seek to Stamp Out Professionalism

Halifax, Nov. 23. — The Amateur Athletic Union of Canada decided yesterday evening to suspend its eastern Ontario, Thunder Bay and British Columbia branches unless their dues and arrears were paid up within three months or satisfactory arrangements made.

Acting on a report of the financial committee presented as the forty-eighth annual meeting went into the final stages, President W. A. Fry, Dunnville, Ont., said the branches had enjoyed the indulgence of the meeting by being allowed to vote.

"Now what are we going to do about it," he questioned delegates.

"I must mention that one of the branches in arrears for cards and affiliation fees made a statement in the public press to-day that its officers would resign unless the union backed them up in suspension of interprovincial rugby union players." He urged, however, that no discrimination be made against the eastern Ontario branch to which he referred on that score and that it be treated as the other two.

AFTER PROFESSIONALISM

Two resolutions designed by Dr. A. S. Lamb, Montreal, and his resolutions committee "to stamp professionalism out of amateurism" received enthusiastic adoption yesterday by the delegates.

The resolutions, adopted unanimously, demanded the "prompt and drastic action" of all sports governing bodies in eliminating the evils of "deceit, dishonesty and hypocrisy" from amateur sport and "a statutory declaration" of athletic histories of American rugby players seeking Canadian amateur registration.

Deploring "the attitude of certain sports governing bodies in condoning offences against amateurism" and "in endeavoring to transfer the responsibility to this union," the first dealt with means of controling money-making amateur games.

It demanded "the careful investigation of the promotion and backing of teams and auditing financial statements from all parties participating in gate receipts" from all branches and allied bodies.

The other resolution was directed against the importation of rugby players from the United States and came directly on top of charges against Roy Berry, Ottawa Rough Riders' player in the Interprovincial Union this fall, that caused the suspension of all Ottawa players from amateur competition. The suspension was lifted by President Fry, but the union gave him full powers to deal with any future developments of the situation as he should see fit.

Fry was re-elected president as the meeting came to a close. C. C. Robinson, Winnipeg, treasurer, and John Leslie, Edmonton, secretary, also were re-elected. All decisions were unanimous.

Recreation Work

In the opening games in the Recreation Soccer League, the Blues defeated the Reds 5 to 3 and the Greens and Golds tied 3 to 3.

For next week's games, all players are requested to use the Central Park dressing-rooms, owing to rebuilding operations going on at Athletic Park.

Those in charge of the teams are P. Stokes, Blue; H. Patterson, Red; L. Shouldice, Gold, and D. Kirby, Green.

It is proposed that a side representative of the physical recreation centres be chosen to play a Sunday afternoon game at Central Park against an outside team. Those interested should inform one of the captains.

Notice is given that the time of the men's tap-dancing classes is again altered to 8.30 o'clock instead of 9.30 as previously arranged.

Next Wednesday, being the last Wednesday in the month, the whole of the dancing periods, from 8.30 to 10 o'clock, are to be given to ballroom dancing. This is open to all enrolled members of gymnasium and swimming classes and to members of the soccer league.

Last Wednesday the theory class for leaders was held for the first time. This will continue to take place at 415 Helmcken Street each Wednesday at 2 o'clock.

The mixed leaders' class is to be held at the Memorial Hall every Friday from 4.30 to 5.30 o'clock for practical work. The following have been elected as gym leaders: Joe Awmark, V. Dale-Johnson, Eric Moyes, Stan Orchard, Harvey Patterson and David Lyttle.

The table tennis team for next Wednesday will be: W. Mair, D. Gibbs, L. Beschizza and L. Shouldice.

Preparations are now being made for an "open night" at the Crystal Garden for all swimming classes and an "open night" at the high school gymnasium for the gym classes.

Victoria's special school board committee will tell the city council's $100,000 loan project group the story of tenders received for the proposed new auditorium at Oaklands School at a meeting in the City Hall Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

In the afternoon the legislative committee will meet for camera discussion at 2 o'clock and will hear W. T. Straith and other supporters of a move to secure a new entrance for Beacon Hill Park present their views at 2.30 o'clock.

BUILDING OFF FOR NOVEMBER

Building figures for the city for the month to date stood at $13,615 to-day, slightly behind the total for the similar period of November, 1934.

However, with another week to go in the month, officials of the city building inspector's department believed the current figures would come very close to equalling those of November last year.

Yesterday a permit was taken out for a $3,800 one-and-one-half story home, which will be built by T. Lamble for Mrs. Sayward Wilson at the corner of Moss and Richardson Streets.

Last Tuesday another permit was issued for a $900 store at the corner of Hillside and Shelbourne Street. The construction will be done for J. D. Grant.

Apart from those erections, no other work of any particular size was started in the city during the week.

ISLAND MAN WINS AT TORONTO FAIR

Bert Young, who operates the Dominion Illustration Farm at Koksilah, scored a notable triumph at the Royal Winter Fair in Toronto, according to word received this morning.

Mr. Young won first prize for soft white winter wheat, first prize for small field peas, and second prize for late oats.

His Chancellor sample of peas, and the Dawson's Golden Chaff wheat from his farm, swept their respective classes in the fair which is one of the largest winter agricultural exhibitions in the world.

Directors of the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau will meet Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Chamber of Commerce to deal with routine business.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Four building permits, with a total value of $1,250, for various building alterations, were issued this week from the Saanich Municipal Hall.

Overseas Lumber Record Foreseen

End of Year Pick-up May Put Waterborne Trade of B.C. Ahead of Last Year's High Mark; Gain in U.S. Business Offsets Small Losses

With a definite pick-up in the year-end business indicated, British Columbia's water-borne lumber exports this year will probably surpass the new high record established in 1934, forest branch officials calculated to-day.

During the first ten months of the year shipments totaled 709,085,852 board feet. Last year for the same period the total was 716,107,903 board feet.

While there is a deficit of 7,000,000 feet to be picked up during the last two months of the year, the department is informed that orders are good and already an increase in the fall and winter business has been demonstrated through a jump of 6,000,000 feet in the October shipments.

Water-borne exports for October this year were 78,000,000 feet against 72,000,000 feet in October, 1934, and 77,000,000 feet in September this year.

Losses have been sustained in the United Kingdom, China and Japan, but, offsetting this is a gain of 29,000,000 feet in shipments to the Atlantic seaboard.

United Kingdom ...	375,700,000	365,400,000
Australia ...	102,000,000	104,000,000
China	94,000,000	74,000,000
U.S.	28,000,000	57,400,000
Japan	58,000,000	43,000,000

Not indicated in these figures are rail shipments to the east and the domestic market which have shown a marked swing upward.

The one drawback to the lumber business, however, is that lower prices are prevailing this year.

The general increase in export and domestic sales is reflected in lumber production, as shown by the log scale, which increased in the ten months from 1,895,703,902 board feet to 2,040,184,621 board feet, exclusive of logs, ties and cordwood.

Observes Two Anniversaries

Rev. T. H. McAllister Speaker at Knights and Dames of Thistle Dinner

A double anniversary was celebrated last night by the Knights and Dames of the Thistle at a dinner and dance in the K. of P. Hall. The occasions were the founding of the Scottish society, November 19, 1919, and the festival of St. Andrew of Scotland, November 30.

The observance of St. Andrew's Day was second only to that of the birth of Robert Burns in the hearts of all Scots, Rev. T. H. McAllister said in an address during the dinner.

He reviewed the history of the patron saint of Scotland, and added that in him were embodied all that was highest and finest in the tradition of Scotland.

It was men like St. Andrew, said Mr. McAllister, who had given civil and religious liberty to the world. The speaker urged his audience to fulfill the tradition of St. Andrew in service to their community.

Mrs. H. Reston, president of the society, presided at the dinner and headed the refreshment committee. A musical programme was presented following the dinner, with contributions by Miss Mary Mitchell, J. Bell, S. Davey, Miss Dawson, J. McMillan, Miss Smith and Mrs. Evelyn Holt.

SPENCER'S CHOIR AT OTTER POINT

In co-operation with the United Service Clubs, the David Spencer Choir last Wednesday evening staged a musical concert at the Otter Point Relief Camp. The choir, under the conductorship of Frank Tupman, was accompanied by Miss Jessie Smith. Vocal solos were rendered by Miss Couch, Miss Unwin and Norman Tyrrell. The boys from the camp, together with residents of the district, filled the hall to capacity, and several numbers were encored. The programme numbers were interspersed with community singing led by the choir. A short skit staged by members of the Spencer's Dramatic Club was enthusiastically received. After the concert a delightful supper was served to the entertainers. The trip to Otter Point was made by a Coach Lines bus, kindly placed at the disposal of the choir by J. W. Spencer.

OTTAWA GROUP OFF NEXT WEEK

Plans Now Completed For Delegation Going to Conference

Final arrangements were pretty well completed to-day for the members of the B.C. cabinet delegation who will attend the Ottawa conference opening December 9.

Premier Pattullo will leave Victoria next Wednesday, entraining in Vancouver Thursday for the east. He will visit Toronto and Montreal before the conference.

Hon. G. M. Weir, Provincial Secretary, will leave Wednesday, stopping in Vancouver Thursday to make a broadcast on health insurance and leaving Vancouver Friday. He also has matters to attend to in Toronto, including the municipal superannuation scheme.

Hon. John Hart, Minister of Finance, and Attorney-General Gordon Sloan, will travel together, leaving next week-end.

Hon. George S. Pearson, Minister of Labor, will not leave until the last minute, being busy with departmental business here. He is expected to go about December 5.

It was indicated that the members of the government who are leaving next week will be kept busy making preparations and will have to limit their appointments.

Hon. A. Wells Gray, who will become acting-Premier, left yesterday evening for the mainland and will visit Nelson for the opening of a new ice rink and civic auditorium, returning here next week-end.

SOUND MAN HERE FROM HOLLYWOOD

Shooting of "Stop, Look and Love" Goes on at Willows To-day

Lambert Day, Hollywood sound-recording expert, arrived in Victoria this morning to join the production staff of Central Films Limited, who are shooting "Stop, Look and Love" here.

Mr. Lambert rushed here in answer to an emergency call from Kenneth Bishop, producer. The company has been having trouble with the sound track of the film, owing to the use of a new type of recording machine.

To-day the company is working on the sets at the Willows.

Several Victorians have secured jobs, some in small parts and about forty-five as extras.

Larry Howard has been appointed double and stand-in for David Manners, who stars in the production with Maxine Doyle.

Art Kerr, well known in the little theatre movement here, is the tough detective. Mr. Kerr says that this is the seventh detective role that he has filled.

NO ELECTION MEETINGS YET

Question arose to-day over the ability of candidates in the forthcoming civic election to secure opportunities to place their views before the electorate as nomination day, December 5, approached and no definite public meetings had been arranged.

Contests are already assured in council and school board lists and the mayor has announced tentative plans for a meeting. However, it was learned to-day the use of the radio might be beyond the scope of the city in view of the approaching Gyro Hamper fund campaign.

Latest entry in the field is Frank G. Mulliner of 1236 Yates Street. Mr. Mulliner, well known in local transportation circles, will seek a school board seat.

This swelled the number of school board candidates to six for the four vacancies. Trustees Kenneth Ferguson and Charles Bishop will stand again, while Trustees W. T. Straith and T. B. Monk have announced their withdrawal from the arena. Walter Staneland, Alec Marshall, Peter J. Riddell and Mr. Mulliner have all decided to enter the ring.

COUNCIL CANDIDATES

In the council lists, Stanley H. Okell, Ed. Williams, Mrs. Alice McGregor and Frank LeRoy are running against the slate of five aldermen whose terms expire at the end of the year. They are Aldermen T. W. C. Hawkins, John Worthington, P. R. Brown, Alec Peden and R. A. C. Dewar.

The Victoria West Liberal Social Club announces there will be no dance held this evening. An old-time dance will be held some time in the near future.

Ward Two Liberals will hold their annual meeting and election of officers for the forthcoming year next Tuesday evening at Liberal headquarters at 8 o'clock. After the election of officers and the usual routine business, Major H. McGiverin, newly-elected president of the Victoria Liberal Association will address the meeting. All Ward Two Liberals are urgently requested to be present.

MAUNA'S GLOW NOT FREQUENT

Eruption Without Loss of Life Remarkable, Says Visitor From Honolulu

Only once previously within the recollection of Mrs. W. Moore, a resident of Honolulu since she was a girl, has the glow of the erupting volcano Mauna Loa been seen at Honolulu, 200 miles away.

Mrs. Moore, who is visiting Victoria with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. E. Brazier of Vancouver, Wash., evinced the greatest interest in the most recent activity of Mauna Loa and sought the latest news of the spectacular eruption on Hawaii Island. Hawaii Island, on which Mauna Loa is located, lies 200 miles to the south of Oahu, on which Honolulu is situated.

"I have seen Mauna Loa in action from close range at various times, but only once within my recollection, and that was when I was a girl, have I witnessed the deep red glow on the horizon from Honolulu," said Mrs. Moore.

"Mauna Loa, when in eruption, is an awe-inspiring sight."

It was remarkable that there had been no loss of life, she considered, in view of the heavy molten lava flow and subsequent tidal wave.

Mrs. Moore is renewing her acquaintance with Victoria after a number of years. She has been visiting her daughter in Vancouver and could not resist the opportunity of coming here for another visit before returning to her home in Honolulu.

SCHOOL PLAN IS EXPLAINED

Protesting Districts in Peace River Last to Come in Scheme, Says Minister

When residents of the school districts of Baldonnel, Taylor and Peace View in the Peace River block, become acquainted with what the government is doing in its school consolidation their opposition is likely to disappear quickly, said Hon. G. M. Weir, Minister of Education, to-day in a statement regarding the threatened "school strike" in those areas.

Dr. Weir explained that the three districts in question had just been brought into the consolidation scheme which now covers fifty-three districts. They were the last to come into the scheme and, apparently, were not fully aware how they would be assisted.

Other districts which had been operating under the plan were lavish in their praise, the minister said, quoting a report of the Dawson Creek Board of Trade meeting on November 7 at which appreciation of the department's work was expressed. He also described how the government was improving health services, widening the training in manual arts and other courses.

"We are paying more than 90 per cent of the teachers' salaries there and are providing a better health and education service than they ever had before and doing it more economically, and more efficiently," he said.

"Actually," he added, "we are paying more than 75 per cent of the total costs in the area and, as a minister of the crown, I am responsible to the people of the province for the way in which the money is spent. The government must have some control over an expenditure like this. If there are any injustices they will be remedied."

"I am fully confidant," he concluded, "that by far the large majority of people in the Peace River block appreciate what we are doing."

WILL OUTLINE POLICE WORK

Sergeant Peachey's subject will be "An Inside Story of Police Work in British Columbia." The address will be followed by a social evening.

Adam Bell, Deputy Minister of Labor in the provincial government, and chairman of the Board of Industrial Relations, will speak on "The Apprentice System," when he appears on Thursday as the speaker at the Rotary Club luncheon to be held in the Empress Hotel.

In conjunction with the observance of library week, Rev. Robert Connell, chairman of the Victoria Library Board, will be the speaker at the Kiwanis Club luncheon in the Empress Hotel on Tuesday. Miss Margaret L. Clay, librarian, will also be a guest at the meeting.

The Business and Professional Women's Club will hold a business session in the clubrooms on Monday evening at 8 o'clock.

CHAMBER DRIVE TOPS OBJECTIVE

Seventy-six Members Secured, Committee Reports to Meeting

With applications for membership totaling seventy-six, the Chamber of Commerce drive for membership exceeded the objective by one, it was reported at a dinner meeting of campaign workers held in Spencer's dining-room yesterday evening.

"We never before had a campaign where we received so many expressions of goodwill," said Fred M. McGregor, chairman of the campaign committee.

"We met many business men who told us that though they might not be able to devote as much time to the chamber as they would like, they felt they should get behind it financially.

"Judging from the reception given to the canvassers, there is a general feeling that times are better."

A hat, an overcoat and a cane were presented by Harold Wilson to Mr. McGregor in recognition of his work.

A hat donated by G. Straith was given to R. H. B. Ker, who headed the list of workers, apart from the chairman, by signing up eight memberships.

W. T. Straith, president of the chamber, extended thanks to the workers on the success of their efforts.

"CRUSADES" AT THE CAPITOL

Cecil B. DeMille's newest spectacle, "The Crusades," is now at the Capitol Theatre.

Ably portrayed by Loretta Young, Henry Wilcoxon, Ian Keith, Katherine DeMille, C. Aubrey Smith, Joseph Schildkraut and some 10,000 other persons, the kings and queens, the soldiers and warriors, the Christians and Mohammedans who engaged in one of the greatest wars in history spring to life under Mr. DeMille's skilled direction in a story that is positively breath-taking in its scope.

In such unbelievably realistic scenes as the storming of the city of Acre and the cavalry charge at Jerusalem, Mr. DeMille once again demonstrates that no director approaches him in ability to handle mobs. While thousands of men battle realistically — scaling walls, dying under a rain of spears and arrows, under a bath of flaming oil, in fierce hand-to-hand encounters on narrow passageways a hundred feet above the ground—the scenes never lose their sense of authenticity.

The story tells of the romance between Richard the Lion-hearted of England and Princess Berengaria of Navarre—roles played by Henry Wilcoxon and Loretta Young. Their marriage is one of convenience, but their love springs into full bloom nevertheless. It is Berengaria's capture by the enemy that brings on the great battles and brings the film to its touching climax.

"Chocolate Soldier" Here Next Month

In 1913 Victoria audiences saw Oscar Strauss's "The Chocolate Soldier." On December 5, 6 and 7, twenty-two years later, the same operetta will be produced, its first appearance locally since the premiere presentation.

DOMINION THEATRE

Music and lyrics are by Dubin and Warren and screen play by Delmer Daves.

COLUMBIA THEATRE

Introducing Aline MacMahon and Guy Kibbee in entirely different roles from those usually associated with them, the second of the Clue Club productions, "While the Patient Slept," First National's latest and most baffling murder mystery drama, is the feature attraction at the Columbia Theatre.

Based on a novel by Mignon G. Eberhart, "While the Patient Sleeps," presents Aline MacMahon as Nurse Sarah Keate, detective fiction's most amazing character, and Guy Kibbee as a small town sleuth.

Edmonton Journal Staff Promotions

Edmonton, Nov. 23. — Promotions of three members of The Edmonton Journal staff were announced yesterday by John M. Imrie, vice-president and managing director. They are:

C. S. Wallace to be assistant to the vice-president and managing director. Mr. Wallace has been managing editor for the last five years.

F. M. Gerrie to be news editor in charge of the news and features department. Mr. Gerrie has been city editor for the last six years.

T. G. Brown to be office manager, as well as secretary-treasurer. Mr. Brown has been chief accountant for the last six years.

These changes will be effective November 25.

Cecil B. DeMille once more turns to the Holy Book for story material. The script is now being written for his next production, "Samson and Delilah." No cast has yet been chosen.

HERE NEXT WEEK

JOSE CANSINO

"THE ARIZONIAN" HERE NEXT WEEK

The roar of six-shooters and volleys from shotguns punctuate the thrilling action of the new Richard Dix drama, "The Arizonian," which will open at the Playhouse Theatre Monday.

"The Arizonian" depicts in exacting detail the early settling of the West, and the warfare that raged between outlaws and peace officers who were fighting to bring order to the turbulent towns of the American frontier.

Dix is seen in the most dramatic role of his long career as a fighting marshal who defies crooked politicians and law enforcement officers in an effort to clean up Silver City where he has accepted the job of peace officer to protect his brother and sweetheart.

The climax comes when Dix is arrested on trumped-up charges by those trying to destroy him. The star fights his way from a burning jail to defeat his enemies, and brings to the picture an unusual ending.

Charles Butterworth has one of the leading roles in the second feature, "Orchids To You." Other featured stars include John Boles and Jean Muir.

PANTAGES TO DIRECT THEATRES

Associated Press

Hollywood, Cal., Nov. 23. — A seventy-two-year-old man who started with $24 and retired with a million times that much is ready to start all over again—at the top.

He is Alexander Pantages, once czar of a tremendous theatre empire, "the biggest that ever was," he said.

"I'm not so good at this retiring business," he smiled as he announced plans to resume active direction of theatres he still owns after six years of retirement.

His new "start" is very different from his first—when he borrowed $24, talked "Klondike Kate" into performing on a percentage and staged his first show in a Klondike, Alaska, dance hall.

Returning to Seattle, he opened a theatre in competition with two great theatre corporations. Later he gained control of theatres—he said 250—throughout the United States and Canada.

A few months before the 1929 market crash, Pantages announced he was about to sell out for $24,000,000.

Dancers Also Clever Actors

Speaking of the Spanish dancers who will appear at the Empire next Saturday, "A. A.," in The Winnipeg Tribune, said:

"Jose Cansino and Tonia de-Aragon took their delighted audience through Spain from sleepy Andalusia to the hills of the north. Mute, they told love tales; they quarreled and made up; they became flower-seller, bullfighter, peasant and aristocrat. Their magic castanets pleaded, rejected, laughed and cried, sang together in joyous duet. The audience capitulated to the charm of the first dances, and before long began to insist on encores. Juan Lopez at the piano deserves more than casual mention. In the difficult rhythms of Albeniz and Granados he never obtruded, but was a sure support to the dancers."

LITTLE ORPHEUM THEATRE

"Transatlantic Merry-go-round" is now at the Little Orpheum Theatre. Jack Benny heads the great cast as a genial master of ceremonies, broadcasting his radio programmes from a palatial ocean liner plying between New York and Europe, aboard which the entire action of the story takes place.

PLAYHOUSE THEATRE

Transcending all her former triumphs, Katharine Hepburn, flashing genius of the films, comes to the screen of the Playhouse Theatre today in "Break of Hearts," one of the most powerful and beautiful stories that has been screened in many years. Her co-star is the magnetic Charles Boyer, idol of the French stage and screen.

Wall St. Stages Rally In Wake of White House News

New York, Nov. 23.—The stock market staged a vigorous rally to-day in the wake of Washington news that brought a rush of buyers in all sections of the list.

Gains of 1 to 5 points were recorded, with the ticker tape dropping behind floor transactions in the first hour and again in the last few minutes.

The close was strong. Transfers approximated 1,850,000 shares.

The principal aid for yesterday's tottering list was seen in the overnight statement of chairman Eccles of the federal reserve board that it was not possible to interfere, officially, even if it was desired, with the rise in stocks because the advance has not been based on the use of credit.

Attention was centred on the Eccles expression that he thought "there is an element of safety and of strength in the fact that security purchases are being financed out of cash without increased use of bank credit."

Higher prices ruled at the start. The volume dwindled later, then the buying demand became brisk just before the close.

TORONTO MINE PRICES PARED

Canadian Press

Toronto, Nov. 23.—Prices were shaded moderately in quiet trading on the mining section of the Toronto Exchange to-day. Golds and base metals were the most active, while the silver and oil issues turned over slowly.

Price changes in the senior gold group included losses of about ¼ point for Lake Shore and Dome and a gain of the same fraction for McIntyre. Wright-Hargreaves, Teck-Hughes and Pioneer recorded recessions of 5 to 10 cents each.

A half dozen of the secondary golds bulked in the day's transactions. God's Lake was again under selling pressure and the price weakened to 1.20, off about 3 cents, and McKenzie sold down about the same amount in active trading but recovered. Recessions of 2 to 5 cents were posted also for Anglo-Huronian, Sylvanite and San Antonio. Pickle Crow and Central Patricia held to the up side.

Noranda failed to make up any of Friday's substantial loss and prices weakened moderately for Sherritt, and Sudbury Basin. Ventures held steady at 1.35. Bear was the weak spot in the silvers, touching 50, off 2 cents. Eldorado, Castle and Premier showed no change.

Texas-Canadian firmed slightly to 1.40 and the other cheap oils were slow and unchanged.

Winnipeg Futures Follow Advances At Buenos Aires

Canadian Press

Winnipeg, Nov. 23.—Unexpected advances at Buenos Aires and moderate foreign demand for wheat gave prices a filip on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange to-day.

Values closed 1⅛ to ⅝ cent higher, November at 88½, December 87⅝, May 91⅞, and July 92⅜ cents.

Good buying entered the local pit as the big South American market registered net gains of 2¼ to 2½ cents a bushel. A government crop report confirming serious losses to wheat in the Argentine occasioned Buenos Aires' strength.

The session was one of the most active week-end markets in some time, with bullish enthusiasm whetted by foreign sales of Canadian wheat estimated at 300,000 bushels, the bulk of which was for shipment from Atlantic ports.

Cash-grains spreads improved fractionally. Coarse grains prices were quietly firm.

Chicago, Nov. 23—Torrid temperatures threatening woe to crops in Argentina had much to do with late advances of Chicago wheat values to-day.

December and May wheat both went to above $1 per bushel. A strong close in the New York stock market had a contributory stimulating effect.

Wheat closed nervous, ⅞ to 1½ higher than yesterday's finish, Dec. 1.00 to 1.00⅛, corn unchanged to ⅜ up, Dec. 59⅞ to 60, oats ⅛ to ⅜ advanced and provisions at 5 to 20 cents rise.

NEW POWER FOR ONTARIO

Canadian Press

Toronto, Nov. 25.—Representatives of three Quebec power companies will be hurrying back here next week to reopen negotiations for settlement of the $300,000,000 power question which has been hanging fire for a year, says The Toronto Globe.

Beauharnois, Ottawa Valley and MacLaren will confer with the Ontario Hydro Commission first, The Globe says.

Gatineau "still remains aloof," according to the article.

"Settlement of the dispute, which once seemed near, is still apparently in the indefinite future, especially in view of Premier Hepburn's illness," says The Globe.

Toronto, Nov. 23.—The Toronto industrial share market spent the short Saturday session in consolidating its position slightly above Friday's close.

Distillery issues recorded gains ranging up to ¾ and Nickel closed around 39¼ for a net gain of ¼.

Volume was heaviest in Brazilian, Nickel, C.P.R., Massey-Harris and the liquors and oils. Brazilian came back to close at 10⅝ for a net gain of ¼, and Massey-Harris at 6¾ was also up ¼. C.P.R. did a little better, showing a gain of ¾.

WILL OBSERVE DAY FOR LAYMEN

Next Sunday Set Aside as Day For Outside Speakers

Sunday, November 24, has been set aside by the British Columbia Conference of the United Church of Canada for observance as Layman's Sunday. This action was taken at the last conference in Vancouver, at the request of the Lay Association.

This special Lay Sunday is now observed from Atlantic to Pacific and was introduced into British Columbia last year. The purpose of the day is to present a challenge to the laymen of the church to take a more active interest in church affairs and to accept a larger degree of the responsibilities of church membership.

The day will be marked by the presence of laymen in the pulpits of the various United churches throughout the province, details being worked out to suit local conditions. In some congregations this date clashes with local arrangements, and Lay Sunday will be observed on another date.

Arrangements are being directed in the various presbyteries by the residents. D. W. Walsh, Milner, is organizing Langley and Surrey municipalities; Dr. G. H. Manchester, New Westminster, treasurer, is also assisting in the arrangements in other parts of Westminster Presbytery. Dr. M. M. J. Archibald, Kamloops, is handling arrangements in the Kamloops-Okanagan presbytery; Mrs. James Silver, Vanderhoof, is in charge of Cariboo presbytery, while J. W. Somers, Nelson, has supervision of details in Kootenay presbytery. In Prince Rupert presbytery Dr. R. G. Large is actively promoting arrangements, while in Vancouver presbytery George Bell and Fred H. Fullerton, honorary secretary, are assisting in arrangements. In Victoria presbytery the vice-president, J. W. Chapman, will have the assistance of the president, W. A. Gleason, who is at present residing at Fanny Bay, and the past president, Capt. F. R. Wright.

Churches in outlying areas desiring further information are urged to communicate with the honorary secretary, Fred H. Fullerton, 3994 West 35th Avenue, Vancouver.

Bishop Discusses Church in Mexico

At a meeting of the Catholic Young People's Club Thursday evening the subject of "Mexico and the Church" was discussed by Bishop MacDonald. Clearly and concisely answering questions put him by his attentive audience, the Bishop showed the injustice of the present persecution in Mexico. A general history of the Church from the time of Cortes to the present religious strife in Mexico was briefly sketched by the speaker. A contrast of the freedom of religion as enjoyed in Canada and of the restrictions placed upon the Mexicans was also given.

The members were served refreshments under the convenership of the Misses Helen Carlin and Nellie Worth. Immediately following this George Murtagh entered into a debate condemning conditions in Italy of the working classes. He was ably supported by Angela Bianco. On the opposing side was Al Dunnet and Miss O'Neill.

The chairman, Victor Montaldi, after allowing several other members to express their opinions, announced the verdict to be a tie. The meeting was then adjourned.

RUNAWAY HORSE KILLED WOMAN

Canadian Press

Windsor, Ont., Nov. 23.—Mrs. Dollena Jane Harris, fifty-six, came to her death as a result of an "unavoidable" accident and Andrew MacDonald, driver of the milk wagon which ran over the elderly woman, was absolved of all blame by a coroner's jury here yesterday evening. The verdict also said the horse must have been frightened "in some manner not established," to cause it to bolt and knock down the woman.

Mrs. Harris, a native of Moose Jaw, Sask., died in a hospital on the night of November 14, two hours after the accident.

TEACHERS HEAR THREE SPEAKERS

Prof. Pellegrini, R. P. Steeves and Harry Charlesworth Talk to Profession

Teachers of Victoria and the southern part of the island gathered at the Empress Hotel to hear Professor Pellegrini of the University of Washington, Barry Charlesworth, general secretary of the British Columbia Teachers' Federation, and Principal R. P. Steeves of North Vancouver, president of the federation.

Professor Pellegrini spoke on the original brand of Fascism, that which arose in Italy under Mussolini, outlining its development as a method of government. He dwelt on Mussolini's change in life, from the anarchistically inclined Socialist and passionate atheist, to the man now committed to the Fascist oath: "I vow to consecrate my life exclusively to God and country."

"Because of this Mussolini is pictured as an opportunist," said Professor Pellegrini.

"It is absurd to expect people not to change, but seldom has a man so completely abandoned his fundamental principles as has Mussolini.

"It has been claimed that this desertion of principle was not by the process of slow evolution, but instantaneous so Mussolini could accommodate himself to the position of power into which the Fascists were projected by a chain of circumstances."

Dealing with the position of education in Fascist countries, Professor Pellegrini declared that it had systematically suffered.

"We do not need to go to Fascist countries to realize that during a period of economic depression the first thing to suffer is education," Professor Pellegrini went on. "But compared with the fate of education in those countries we are faring well and have reason to be thankful."

KING SCHOOL REPORT

Mr. Charlesworth urged teachers to read the King report on the British Columbia schools system and read a letter from Dr. S. J. Willis, superintendent of education, setting out that the Department of Education desired to have a full expression of the teachers of the province on the report, and inviting them to submit any constructive suggestions.

Mr. Charlesworth spoke of parts of the report dealing with teaching appointments made by provincial authority, salaries through the province being made on the provincial basis, the financial position of education, and the matter of curricula revision.

Mr. Charlesworth went on to discuss the place of education in the state, the object of education and its place in the Canadian constitution, quoting Sir Michael Sadler, the Dean of Canterbury and others.

As for education in England, Mr. Charlesworth said, it was much changed from what it was. He said many Victoria people who had left England twenty-five to forty years ago were accustomed to visualize the English system now as it was then. But in this they were quite in error.

CURRICULUM REVISION

Mr. Steeves declared that although all teachers might not agree with the King report, it was nevertheless well worth their study. He urged them to take advantage of the opportunity it offered for curriculum revision.

"This is a great age for teachers in British Columbia, and their recognition as units in the educational system," Mr. Steeves said, referring to the King report and the invitation from Dr. Willis to the teachers for suggestions and comments.

Mr. Steeves said it was not the intention of the federation to force the proposed bill through unless the executive felt certain the teachers of the province were satisfied with it.

Dr. Willis attended the gathering and was introduced to it by W. H. Wilson, president of the Victoria Teachers' Federation, who was chairman.

W. H. Creelman moved the vote of thanks to the visiting speakers.

HOURS OF WORK ARE DISCUSSED

"During the month of December many employers, and particularly those engaged in the Christmas trade, will find it necessary to either apply to the Board of Industrial Relations for permission to work employees overtime or employ extra help," says W. G. Stone, local superintendent of the Employment Bureau.

"An important aspect is the part that the purchasing public can play in helping employers to regulate the hours of work of their employees.

"During the winter season, fuel distribution constitutes a problem which has heretofore been met by working truck drivers and helpers long hours. Hours of work for this type of employee have been limited by government regulation and it is pointed out that customers can greatly assist fuel merchants to keep the hours of work of their drivers within the regulation limit by ordering fuel supplies as far as possible in advance of immediate requirements.

"My belief, based on an extensive experience with the unemployment situation," says Mr. Stone, "is that there is too great a tendency to work regular employees overtime rather than spread the extra hours of employment among the competent people who are relying on holiday season work to enable them to be self-sustaining.

"The Department of Labor, operating seventy offices in Canada and ten in the principal centres of British Columbia, is in an excellent position to co-operate with employers who desire to assist the Hon. George S. Pearson, Minister of Labor, in distributing the available employment among the greatest number of our citizens.

"This policy appears particularly desirable at this season when so many of our citizens are receiving only the bare necessities of life and are depending on seasonal employment to provide the extra comforts so appreciated by everyone at Christmas.

"An excellent opportunity is presented to help some less-fortunate citizen," said Mr. Stone, "and our office will be at the disposal of any employer who can use competent help of any kind."

Double Quick Starting!

WINTER 76 GASOLINE and

Hard starting is caused by—a gasoline which fails to vaporize quickly at low temperatures . . . a motor oil that becomes viscous and thick with cold, creating a drag on your motor.

Because Winter 76 Gasoline contains the correct proportion of highly volatile elements, it vaporizes quickly and thoroughly at low temperatures, spreads evenly to every cylinder, and ignites instantly you step on the starter.

Triton Motor Oil possesses high fluidity at low temperatures, eliminates drag and permits the starter to turn the motor over easier and faster. Triton's fluidity is due to Union's Propane Solvent Process of refining, which rejects all wax and low-grade viscous materials.

Use Winter 76 and Triton. They minimize cold-motor wear and increase the all-round efficiency of your motor, and reduce the load on your battery.

¶ Watch for the two banners—the orange 76 and the blue and white Triton. ¶ Start today with Winter 76 in the tank and Triton in the crankcase—and enjoy double quick starting.

CREW PUTS OUT FIRE

Serious Explosions Averted Aboard Tanker Aleutian at Port Angeles

Port Angeles, Nov. 23.—Quick work by the crew of the oil tanker Aleutian, laden with 80,000 gallons of gasoline, and city firemen extinguished fire aboard ship at a dock here early to-day, preventing a major explosion. Three small explosions occurred.

The forward interior of the tanker was badly damaged. Mate M. Armstrong of Seattle was bruised when hurled against a bulkhead by the first explosion and two firemen, Byron Winter and Oscar Ullstrom, sustained minor burns.

Preparations were under way shortly after the tanker arrived at 3 a.m. to lift drums from the hold Armstrong turned a switch to start a windlass, and an explosion followed. Fire started but Capt. Dale Kenney and his crew of nine put it out.

The city department was called, and two other explosions caused more fire. The crew of the coast guard cutter Redwing, the only ship nearby, aided in fighting the flames.

Captain Kenney said the ship would probably have to be drydocked at Seattle for repairs.

Holiday Mail On McKinley

Consignment of 500 Bags Going Aboard President Liner For Distant Places.

Thousands of letters and cards, bearing cheery Christmas and New Year Greetings from people in Canada, the United States and the British Isles for relatives and friends in countries on the other side of the world, are in the mail rooms of the outbound liner President McKinley, which is in port this afternoon for two hours on her way to the Orient.

Waiting at Victoria for the arrival of the President McKinley this afternoon are 500 bags of mail. In these bags and letters, cards and packages from Victoria, from all parts of Canada and from the British Isles. United States mails were loaded in Seattle before the ship sailed from that port at 11 o'clock this morning.

Most of the letters and packages aboard the ship are destined to points far in the interior of China, where mail connections from the coast ports are none too certain; for the isolated islands of the Philippine group and for points in the Dutch East Indies and other places as far as the Straits Settlement and India. Mail for the other side of India is usually dispatched from Atlantic ports.

Christmas trees and suitable decorations for the holiday season are being carried on the President McKinley, for she will spend Christmas day at sea, between Shanghai and Kobe, and New Year's Eve celebrations will be carried out between Yokohama and Victoria. The ship is due back here January 7.

WORLD SPANNED BY AIR LINES

Passengers Can Now Travel Completely Around the World By Airplane

New York, Nov. 23.—Inauguration of regular transpacific air service by the Pan-American Airways yesterday bridged the last gap in the network of air lines circling the world. A passenger now may travel around the world by plane.

Leaving San Francisco on the China Clipper, one would go by way of Honolulu and several Pacific islands to Manila and the coast of China. At Canton the passenger could step into an Imperial Airways plane, fly down to Singapore, then westward to Delhi, Bagdad, Cairo and Rome.

From there he could go to Lisbon by the Royal Dutch or the French Airline. At Lisbon he could board a plane of the French Line or the Deutsche Lufthansa, German Line, fly down the west coast of Africa and then make the South Atlantic hop to Natal, Brazil.

There he would find a Pan-American plane waiting to take him up the coast of South America, across Panama and northward up the Pacific Coast to San Francisco.

Loading Big Lumber Cargo

Loading in excess of 1,000,000 feet of Vancouver Island lumber at this port, the British freighter Quarrington Court, Capt. C. H. Hurst is today at the Ogden Point piers to King Brothers, local shipping agents. She docked from the mainland yesterday evening at 9.15 o'clock and will get away to sea on Tuesday, en route to London and other ports in England.

A sister-ship, the Tilsington Court, Capt. J. W. Sutherland, docked this morning at 3 o'clock and will leave early this evening for Vancouver. She is taking 200,000 feet of lumber at this port.

To-morrow afternoon a third Court ship will arrive here for a parcel of lumber. She is the Jeddington Court. Tuesday morning the Ss. Monkleigh is expected for lumber.

which, on several occasions has visited Victoria, will shortly be sent to San Francisco to be renamed the Exalted and to be outfitted for a long cruise to Mexico, Central America, South America and the South Seas. Capt. Charles A. Watts of Oakland and Capt. Oscard W. Schwarz, formerly of Seattle, will lead a party of scientists and adventure-seekers on the cruise.

Capt. Schwarz will be the vessel's navigator and will devote some of his time to oceanography, hydrography and meteorology. He has been connected with ships and shipping for the last twenty-five years. He served as nautical expert for the United States Shipping Board, is a former manager for the Max Kuner Company of Seattle and was officer in charge of the United States Navy hydrographic office.

TO STUDY NATIVES

The expedition will be in charge of Dr. Bernard Jensen of Oakland who will make an investigation of the natives of the South Sea Islands. He will be accompanied by two scientist-students of the University of California who will study bird and animal life and geological formations, two writers and a motion picture photographer.

The Sanwan, of 219 gross tons, was built in Seattle by Robert Moran. She is a three-master of the schooner type, 132 feet in length, with a beam of twenty-six feet and a depth of fifteen feet. Upon her arrival in San Francisco she will be converted into a Diesel-powered yacht. Fuel oil tanks with a capacity of 7,000 gallons, sufficient for a cruising radius of 10,000 miles, will be installed.

The Sanwan will go to Hilo, Honolulu, Pago Pago, Apia, Suva, the New Hebrides, Port Moresby in New Guinea, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania and to the west coasts of South America, Central America and Mexico. The duration of the cruise will be between seven and eight months.

Jellicoe Rests In Westminster

Body of Late Admiral to Remain in Abbey Until Burial in St. Paul's

London, Nov. 23.—The Prince of Wales, who holds the rank of vice-admiral in the British navy, will represent the King at the funeral of Earl Jellico on Monday, it was announced to-day.

The body of the Admiral was placed in Henry VII Chapel of Westminster Abbey to-day. It will remain there until the state funeral in St. Paul's Cathedral. Private services were held to-day, attended by members of the late Admiral's family and close friends.

A Court Circular issued yesterday evening expressed the "profound sorrow" of the King at the death of Earl Jellicoe.

The Circular said: "The King has learned with profound sorrow of the death of Earl Jellicoe, who will for all time be remembered as the commander of the Grand Fleet during a long and critical period of war.

"The King knows the loss of this great seaman will be deeply felt throughout the whole Empire, and not least by the people of New Zealand, the Royal Navy and ex-service men, whose confidence and affection he quickly won by his devotion to their welfare."

TO REST NEAR NELSON

Full honors will be paid at the funeral. The Admiral's body will rest in a crypt in St. Paul's Cathedral, a few feet from the tomb of Nelson, hero of the Battle of Trafalgar. Arrangements are now under way for the route of the funeral cortege.

Admiral Jellicoe died Wednesday following a chill which he caught while attending Armistice Day services at Whitehall.

In its tribute to the former commander of the fleet, The Times said: "Earl Jellicoe set an example of integrity, courage, dignity and self-control. He could pass through the heavy fire of fierce, unending controversy with never a word or a deed to diminish the respect in which he was held and he could state his own defence with modesty and candor and without belittling the achievements of others."

"Watchful Waiting" Is Dock Situation

San Francisco, Nov. 23.—The Weyerhaeuser freighter Pacific was tied up to-day at its East Bay pier by demands of its engine crew for payment under the West Coast wage scale, rather than the lower East Coast scale.

Otherwise, however, little tension marked the waterfront.

Seamen and ship operators alike adopted a "watchful waiting" policy, marking time while awaiting the outcome of government efforts to settle the Gulf of Mexico longshore dispute.

The Sage Brush, one of three vessels held in port here for several days by labor troubles, sailed late yesterday after seamen withdrew their demands that they be signed on for a round-trip voyage. The other two ships, the President Taft and the Plow City, got away Thursday.

Crew Members Hurt In Gale

Montreal, Nov. 23.—After bucking a fifty-mile-an-hour gale for six hours off Bermuda on her return trip to Montreal from Barbados, in the course of which four members of her crew suffered minor injuries, the freighter Cornwallis of the Canadian National Steamships, docked here early this week.

The ship stopped at Charlottetown, where the injured seamen were examined and pronounced fit to continue to Montreal. On arrival here the carpenter and one seaman were taken to a hospital for observation.

According to the members of the crew, the Cornwallis headed into a storm, during which the wind reached a velocity of fifty miles an hour. The "blow" came at a point off Bermuda when the freighter was running at a reduced speed of from four to five and a half knots. The men were hurt while battening down a hatch when a mountainous wave engulfed the ship, throwing them against bracings.

There was no damage done to the Cornwallis and she was only six hours later in her arrival at this port.

PLAN VOYAGES TO W. INDIES

Empress of Australia Will Take Five Cruises to Interesting Southern Ports

Six cruises to the West Indies from New York are being offered by the Canadian Pacific with the two Atlantic giantesses, Empress of Britain and Empress of Australia.

First of these cruises, a nine-day return trip from New York to Kingston, Jamaica; Havana, Cuba, will be made by the Empress of Britain, sailing from New York December 27 and returning on January 6 in time to start her world cruise from New York January 7.

The remainder of the West Indies cruise series will be carried out by the Empress of Australia, sailing from New York January 23 on an eighteen-day cruise; February 12 on a sixteen-day cruise; February 29 on an eighteen-day cruise; March 21 on an eighteen-day cruise, and April 9 for a ten-day Easter cruise to Jamaica and Cuba. On her eighteen-day cruise the Australia will include calls at St. Pierre, Martinique; Fort de France, Martinique; Port of Spain, Trinidad; La Guria, Venezuela; Willemstad, Curacao; Cristobal, Kingston, Jamaica and Havana. On her sixteen-day cruise out of New York, February 12, Hamilton, Bermuda and Nassau, Bahamas, are additional ports of call, but Port of Spain, Willemstad and Cristobal are not included.

SHORE EXCURSIONS

Optional shore excursions at most of the ports visited on all six cruises have been arranged by the Canadian Pacific.

For the first time in ten years the Canadian Pacific has abandoned its annual Mediterranean cruise, performed since the advent of the Empress of Britain four years ago by the Empress of Australia. Instead the Empress of Australia is being sent on the most ambitious West Indies cruise schedule ever attempted. Her design, large staterooms and spacious public rooms make her an ideal ship for tropical service, as her several Mediterranean cruises have demonstrated, and she is expected to prove an equal success in her new sphere of activities during the winter and early spring.

While the Australia plies between New York and the West Indies, the Empress of Britain, mightiest of the Canadian Pacific's liners, will be making her fourth annual world cruise, visiting India, China, Japan, the Hawaiian Islands and South Africa and South America, the two continents included to compensate for the withdrawal of the cruise ship from the usual Mediterranean portion of her tour.

Merriman Talks

SOME TIME ago I made a casual reference to Red Lawson's All-Red-All-Champion bowling team which is blazing its modest but certain path to the head of The Times Fivepin League in its own quiet way.

It is not because I am a member of this greatest quintette of bowlers that ever left a kingpin standing that I am talking about them.

It is simply to meet an undercurrent of slander against the All-Reds that is being spread through a whispering campaign, probably inspired by envy on the part of Les Colton's Linoleers, Tommy Nute's Metalites, Walter Metcalfe's Deckhands, Syd Jenkins's Keytappers, "Pete" Sallaway's Columeens, Rom. Knott's Circulators and "Dick" Donaldson's Classifiers.

Some other bowlers who use the Olympic Alleys may argue that there is no reason why The Times League should get space outside the sporting columns that other leagues do not get, but a matter of principle is involved.

Some of Red Lawson's opponents are not bowling according to Marquis of Queensbury rules.

STRONG, SILENT MAN

EVERYBODY who knows Red, or Melvin Stanley, to give him his full name, knows that he is a quiet, unassuming kind of player.

He is one of the strong, silent men of the Olympics.

(The only reason he hates fire alarms is because he can't make more noise than the siren.—Printer Sheilds).

Most of the envy against Capt. Lawson and his team, I believe, is stirred by that silent inscrutableness with which he masks his strategy.

Seven or eight weeks ago when the league opened, and Major Lawson had demonstrated the soundness of his unerring judgment in selecting his team, he called his forces before him as a commander going into battle

"Mrs. Metcalfe and men," he said. "I needn't waste time telling us how good we are.

"We know it.

"But before you go into action there is one thing I want to say. Stick by the Redheads team!

"After the first game you will receive tempting offers.

"You will all be offered the rank of captain in other teams. They will try to smash this combination!

"They will claim the league should be evened up.

"Now do we stick or do we separate for the fleeting glory of a captain's rank in another team?

AS ONE MAN

"WE STICK," answered Colonel Lawson's players as one man.

"Fine!" he answered. "To-day we are playing at the Olympic Alleys.

"Stick together and next year we will be playing at the Olympic Games."

So under Brigadier Lawson the All-Red-All-Stars went into action.

A strike with the first ball in the league contest, bowled by the lady member of the team, was an auspicious beginning.

One game the All-Red-All-Champs won, two games, three games and the mutterings of other teams threatened a league break-up.

HOW THE NOISE STARTED

THEY BROUGHT noise-makers to put Brigadier Lawson and his players off their shots.

Outside of supplying an automobile horn, a megaphone and a few firecrackers for his team to relieve the tension of silence, Brigadier Lawson up to this point had scorned to adopt such tactics.

The Reds were the quiet, serious bowlers of the league.

But the lid was lifted. Regretfully the Red Brigadier decided that since other teams had introduced this element of noise he, too, must adopt those tactics.

Next week he brought two auto horns and a couple of megaphones.

BAGPIPES THREATENED

This competition was met the following week when Ed. Relf brought a bugle.

Next Tuesday there will be two bugles and a trombone, unless an armistice on noise is declared.

Since the other teams started this noise racket, the Reds have started to fade a little—apparently.

The reason for this would never have been given, except to confound the plotting that has been going on to undermine the Red Brigadier's combination.

"Mrs. Metcalfe and men," Brigadier Red said in one of his pre-battle orations before the fourth game. "We are too good. We must ease off to make a fight of it and come up strong later."

NOMINATION BOWLING

SO HE explained his system.

We now play what we call nomination fivepins.

To use a colloquialism, we "string 'em along."

"Don't discourage the other teams by too many successes," said Brigadier Red. "Let them get within playing distance.

"The league is young.

"There will be plenty of time to wind up in a blaze of glory.

To tell you about his system.

Just before one of his players goes into action the brigadier signals the shots. Sometimes we are told to get all but the king pin.

Sometimes we are told to take out the head pin only. Sometimes we are told to take the three pin only, or the two and the three and leave the king pin standing.

Rivals, not understanding Brigadier Red's strategy, are inclined to be uncomplimentary. In fact, to put it bluntly, they frequently give us the Bronx cheer.

The art of skilfully guiding a ball past all other pins to get a nominated pin and leave the others standing is a fine point in bowling which is beyond their comprehension.

* * * *

SORRY to take up all the space on a partly personal matter, but the reputation of the All-Reds and their worthy leader is at stake. At all costs it must be defended, although it only leaves room to run a couple of other items gathered on the beat.

STEPPED INTO IT

Dr. Allon Peebles stepped into one the other day, the reporter who covered the hospital convention told me. The doctor, the reporter and Reeve Crouch sat side by side and the talk swung around to Norman Whittaker, who was also at the meeting.

"Mr. Whittaker is a fine type of man,—Saanich showed good judgment when they elected him," said the doctor.

"Yes," said Reeve Crouch. "I ran against him."

RHYMING INSURANCE MAN

Didn't know until the other day Fred M. "Insurance" McGregor is a natural as a rhymster. At the Chamber of Commerce directors' meeting the other day they decided to send some holly at Christmas time to the U.S. senators and congressmen who recently visited here.

"Yes; good idea," said Fred. "And we should send a Christmas greeting. Let me think."

He placed a finger on his massive brow, thought for a few seconds, and then shot this one:

Just a sprig of holly,
From that city by the sea,
Where sunshine, golf and fishing
Mean so much to you and me.
When you congressmen feel weary
And know not what to do,
Just come to old Victoria
And your youth we will renew.

Chatted with Fred afterwards about his accomplishment.

"There's nothing to it," he said, and I learned his services are in great demand as an extemporaneous rhymster at local affairs, where he gives introductions in rhyme. Without hesitation he shot this one at me.

Let me introduce Tom Merriman,
Who writes a column in The Times.
We let him live, I don't know why;
Men are hanged for lesser crimes.

I didn't ask him for any more samples.

MORE BRIDGE

Bert Simpson handed me the rest of the Simpson Bridge System rules Here they are:

Feel free to criticize your partner. He will do much better as a result.

If it is a money game, always stop when you are ahead. It will leave a lasting impression and folks will remember you.

Don't try to remember the rules; it is too confusing.

World's Two Longest Bridges Symbols of Daring, California Sees Dreams of 80 Years Ago Come True

Two stupendous feats of engineering which will give the San Francisco district the greatest bridges in the world will bring to realization dreams that Californians have nurtured for more than eighty years. In this story a correspondent tells of these two mammoth construction projects, the myriad problems involved, and the romance that enters into the rearing of these gigantic structures.

By PHILIP J. SINNOTT

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE WORLD'S largest and costliest bridge game is holding the rapt attention of the whole San Francisco region. Enthusiasm, doubled and redoubled, has won honors in engineering skill and civic enterprise.

An eighty-year dream of bridges across San Francisco Bay to Oakland and across the Golden Gate is coming true before the eyes of millions of eager-eyed onlookers. Across the waters reach out not only the world's two largest bridges, both building simultaneously.

Place Scotland's famous Firth of Forth bridge end to end with New York's new George Washington bridge. Add on the Brooklyn and the Queensboro bridges. Tack on Detroit's Ambassador bridge, the Delaware bridge at Philadelphia, and the Quebec bridge.

San Francisco's two new bridges will be even longer than this string of giants.

Visualize the vast amount of steel that went into Boulder Dam. You will have to multiply that by nine to approximate the amount of steel that is reaching out over San Francisco Bay and the Golden Gate. The bridge projects also require half as much concrete as went into Boulder Dam.

Breaking down the "water walls" that surround San Francisco on its peninsula . . . . a giant double suspension bridge linking the city with Oakland on the east, and a tremendous single span crossing the famous Golden Gate into the north country. The potential changes in population that may follow opening of these world's largest bridges are apparent from a glance at this graphic bird's-eye map, which gives some hint of the immensity of the engineering problems solved.

LONGEST IN WORLD

The San Francisco-Oakland Bay bridge will be 4½ miles long—the world's longest span. It is really a combination of two types of bridge, each longer than any other the world has ever seen.

Two mile-long suspension bridges, in tandem, with a central support, will carry traffic from the city to Yerba Island, in midbay. There its highway plunges into a tunnel through a hill rising above the bridge level. From this point a cantilever structure bridges the water between the island and the Oakland mainland, two miles away.

The Golden Gate bridge will span the world-famous entrance to San Francisco Bay, and will connect the city with the alluring Redwood Empire region to the north. This span will be 1¾ miles in length.

But while it bows to the Bay Bridge in length and cost, California custom insists on superlatives, so this is the longest single-span bridge in the world. More than twice the length of any suspension span now built, if you please.

DREAM OF YEARS

Each bridge presented its own problems and has its own personality. Each has its own method of financing. Each has daring features never before attempted on a bridge job.

Old as American ownership of California is the dream of bridging the bay. When gold rush days of '49 brought fleets of shipping to the city, a 2,000-foot pier was built in 1850 for wharfage. There was serious talk of continuing the pier, on floats, clear across the bay. But only talk.

In 1853, a full-stage setting of "San Francisco in 1935," with a suspension bridge stretching from San Francisco's Telegraph Hill to Mt. Diablo, back of Oakland, was the grand finale in a current stage hit.

That meant a thirty-mile span, but the scene was wildly applauded. Bridge talk resulted in a "Song of the Oakland Bridge," popular in the fifties.

SHERMAN'S PLAN FAILED

In that era, William Tecumseh Sherman, bank manager and Mexican war veteran, later Civil War luminary, began plans for a pile trestle and earth fill across to San Leandro. That petered out, too.

Coming of the railroads brought still other plans, including one which featured "rail tracks and vehicular and pedestrian lanes, with booths and saloons to make the bridge a place of popular resort for moonlight promenades." That, too, was abondoned, moonlight promenades and all.

"Emperor Norton," the town character, who had delusions that he was "Emperor of North and South America," issued grandiose proclamations in 1868, ordering immediate construction of a bridge so vast that a mere extension ran from Sausalito to the Farallone Islands, twenty miles out at sea. And his mad effort was as effective as others up to that time.

The engineering problem was breath-taking. Costs were prohibitive. The depth of the bay, the surge of the tide race, the heavy sea traffic, all presented barriers.

The War Department insisted that any bridge across the Golden Gate must be such that, even if crippled or destroyed by bomb or battleship, it would not block the harbor, cutting off the Mare Island naval base.

GENIUS CARRIES THROUGH

The Navy Department was equally concerned with safety of its anchorages, drydocks, and other facilities.

But engineering genius surmounted all these and a host of men have productive jobs on the work.

The need for 300,000 tons of steel kept eastern plants busy, while other plants were producting enough wire to circle the world six times at the equator.

Trainloads of supplies puffed in from all over the country. The big job has been an inspiration throughout the depression, a hope for the future, and already shows effects that will be felt for years to come.

Fascists Rule Confidently, Nazis In Fear and Doubt

From a Special Correspondent

ROME.

FOR THE person who revisits Italy and also knows Germany, some comparison between Nazi and Fascist regimes and between the positions of Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini is almost inevitable. And the comparison is almost always in favor of Italy.

The regime in Italy not only is stabilized, but seems very sure of itself. The regime in Germany does not seem entirely stabilized and seems far from sure of itself.

In Italy, in the early days before the march on Rome, there were open battles between Black Shirts and Reds. The latter had been a real danger. In 1920 labor unions, inspired by them, had gone Bolshevik, for a time took possession of automobile and metallurgical establishments in northern Italy, ran them through Soviets and flaunted the red flag.

With Fascism on top, with other political parties long since dissolved, there appears to be an era of tranquility.

The Nazis also fought Communists in the streets of German cities, but the Communists never did have possession of any factories in any German industrial town. With Nazidom on top, with other political parties dissolved, Germany still does not enjoy an era of tranquility. The reasons are obvious.

NO RACIAL HATE HERE

The Fascists, unlike the Nazis, did not find it necessary to make a "purge" of their ranks and slay hundreds of their own adherents, as did the Hitlerites in June, 1934.

Fascism, unlike the Nazis, has made no fetish of false racial theories. It has not made anti-Semitism any part of its creed. It has not made war upon a racial minority. A Jew has been mayor of Rome; Baron Sonnino was a powerful foreign minister; Luigi Luzzatti was for years an almost permanent minister of the treasury and for a short time premier of Italy.

In Germany Jews are treated as less than citizens, barred from office and their shops boycotted; in Italy, Fascism uses the talents of Jews.

IN ACCORD WITH CHURCH

Again, Fascism, unlike the Nazis, has not made war upon the Roman Catholic Church nor upon the Protestants within the country. To the contrary, Mussolini, with statesmanlike wisdom, joined with a statesman-Pope in settling a quarrel which had lasted for more than sixty years.

In other days other religions were "tolerated" by the Italian state. The Fascist state "recognizes" them and they have full status and liberty.

In Italy, Mussolini's speeches are rather rare and only come upon really important occasions. Nor does he have a half-dozen verbal volcanoes in pants rushing around the kingdom spouting.

PRESS IS NOT STRANGLED

In Germany, before his throat went bad on him, Hitler was continually rushing around making speeches—probably thirty to Mussolini's one. His chief lieutenants are constantly making talks.

In both countries the press is under rigid control. But in Italy the papers still look like newspapers, as they do have some news. In Germany they look like a Nazi house organ, filled with speeches of the men above-mentioned and governmental decrees.

Nazis insist that the bulk of Germany is passionately back of Hitler. But it is to be doubted whether there could be repeated in Berlin what some of us saw in Rome on October 2, the day of national mobilization, when 10,000,000 Italians obeyed the Duce's call.

Nothing had been announced in the papers, but Romans instinctively felt that this event was the prelude to an offensive against Ethiopia and just as instinctively that the Duce would make a speech.

VAST CROWD ASSEMBLES

The Piazzi Venezia is a vast square, on one side of which is the ancient Palazzo Venezia, in which Mussolini has his offices and from the little balcony of which he makes his principal speeches in Rome.

Now the afternoon of October 2 was marked by leaden skies, from which occasionally cold showers dripped, but people began to congregate in the Piazza Venezia as early as 5 o'clock.

In Berlin everything would have been regimented. Blazing announcements would have been printed in the press. Nazi captains would have notified workmen and others where to report and how to march to where Hitler would speak. And woe to them if they did not turn up!

I noticed nothing of the sort in Rome. Roman folk began to come up quietly of their own free will in twos and threes. The old nursery rhyme—"rich man, poor man, beggar men," etc., seemed exemplified by the specimens I saw around me.

EVEN BLACK SHIRTS HALT

By 6 o'clock the Piazza Venezia was packed with people. Steps of the Victor Emmanuel held their thousands.

All the eight or nine streets leading into the Piazza were jammed. In those streets some Black Shirt organizations, accompanied by their bands, tried to get into the Piazza. They were stopped where they were. They could not move further.

The babel of voices was deafening.

I have seen Hitler demonstrations in Berlin, the crowds that gathered around St. Paul's Cathedral in London for King George's Silver Jubilee, the throng at Madison Square Garden in New York when President Wilson closed his 1916 campaign. This beat them all. There must have been at least 250,000 people present.

At last, at 6.35, Mussolini, dressed in military uniform, appeared on the balcony. The Fascists, like the Nazis, can stage some wonderful spectacles.

STRIKES PROPER NOTE

Mindful of the nearness of the Roman Forum, where more than 2,000 years ago leaders used to address the probable ancestors of the present crowd, he struck the right authentic Roman note:

"Black Shirts of the revolution, men and women of all Italy, Italians living beyond the mountains and the seas, hear!"

They strained their ears to hear, because the broadcasting apparatus had failed and Mussolini strained his voice to let them hear. He has not the far-carrying bellow of Hitler nor the silvery penetrating voice of the late William Jennings Bryan.

His tones seemed more like the sharp staccato ones of a general addressing his troops. He used very few gestures. But he smashed his fist into the palm of his other hand when he declared:

"We shall reply with acts of war to acts of war!"

MIGHTY CHANT OF "DUCE"

As he made his points, there was no cheering like that of a Canadian crowd; nor the "Hear, hear!" of an English assembly; nor the "Heil Hitler" of the Nazis.

Instead, there was a vast chant: "Duce, Duce, Duce, Duce!"

Four times it called for him and four times he came back to the balcony. He stood stock still facing them, looking at them and being gazed at.

Then he saluted to right and left and the crowd began reluctantly to disperse.

As huge throngs listen . . . Adolf Hitler speaks after the stage has been carefully set and thousands of his listeners herded to the scene. . . . Mussolini speaks, and the Roman populace, instinctively sensing drama, flocks unbidden to the scene.

BOOKS OF THE DAY

Queer People - - Eighteen of Them Parade In This Book

VERY unusual, indeed, are the eighteen people you meet in "Queer People," written by Dr. Harold Dearden.

There is, for example, Fritz Hartmann, the brutal murderer of post-war Germany.

"'How many murders have you really committed?' he was asked when the long list of suggested victims, like a roll-call at a preparatory school, had wrought even the judge himself to a pitch almost of hysteria.

"Fritz propped his back wearily against the back of the dock.

"'It may have been thirty,' he said, 'or even forty. It's so hard to remember these things.'"

Yet he was but a novice in crime compared with Gilles de Rais, the fifteenth century French "killer," for whose blood "two hundred parents clamored."

BRITISH HIGH SOCIETY RACKET

WE MEET also the beautiful Mary Anne Clarke, whom, says Dr. Dearden, "the committee of any adventuress's club would assuredly have blackballed."

Though her methods were questionable, there was no question of her ability to get what she wanted.

She captivated Frederick Augustus, Duke of York, the second son of George II, and the "racket" they worked, based on the fact that he was Commander-in-chief of the Army, would turn "Scarface" Al Capone green with envy.

The method was simple. People who wanted positions in the army applied to her, and with the ready assistance of the Commander-in-chief they got them—at a price.

Her fees were very high, too, though, one occasion is recorded on which the applicant obtained his post for nothing.

"For some reason one of the footmen was suddenly seized with a passionate desire to be a colonel. Mary Anne heard of this. She pinned a note to her bed curtain, and on the following morning Frederick Augustus did the rest. He ascertained on arriving at his office that a certain battalion would be leaving very shortly for a period of service in India. The spirited footman went out in command of it."

MAN-WOMAN

DR. DEARDEN tells also of that strange man-woman, the Chevalier D'Eon de Beaumont, who always wore female dress.

La Pompadour was jealous of him, and when he was sent to England she spread rumors that he was a woman. No sooner had he arrived than everyone started betting on his sex.

But he was wounded in a fencing match, and the doctors who attended him declared that he was a woman. This announcement caused vast sums of money to change hands, but thereafter the Chevalier was left in peace until his death in 1810.

"As a fitting climax to his bizarre career, he was then indisputably proved to have been a man."

Some of the other members of the queer collection of people in this book are well-known, Casanova, Rousseau, Beau Brummel, John Hatfield, who impersonated an M.P. and was hanged for abusing one of the privileges appertaining to the office, and the Tichborne claimant, most remarkable of all impostors.

So they pass across the pages, these eighteen unbelievably strange people, brought to life again by the attractively wielded pen of Dr. Dearden.

Told in his own delightfully ironic style, the stories of those people we knew before acquire a new lease of life, and to those who like the unusual I say "Meet Dr. Dearden's Queer People."

Book Reviewer Writes a Novel

HARRY HANSEN, who has been a book reviewer since way back when, tries his hand at a novel in "Your Life Lies Before You," and does a very neat job of it.

His book is an unpretentious story about life in a small Mississippi River city in Iowa at the turn of the century, and it deals chiefly with three people—a nice young chap who can't quite decide whether he is going to be a great writer or a great musician, but who is sure that he is going to be a great something; a warped old genius of a violinist who has drifted into the town and supports himself by giving lessons to scrub-nosed hopefuls, and the violinist's daughter, who is ardently loved by the nice young man.

Our young man is a reporter on the local paper. Falling for the girl, he begins taking violin lessons from her father to get into her good graces, and unexpectedly reveals genuine musical talent.

Then the father sends the girl to Chicago to have her voice trained, and the young man promptly drops everything to follow her, getting a job on a Chicago paper and forgetting all about his fiddle.

Just as he gets going nicely she comes home again—so he throws up his job and follows her.

All this works up to an unexpected and rather harrowing climax, in which the ardent lad takes a severe bumping from life; and the story is memorable for its vivid picture of river-town life and its sympathetic study of youth and its emotions, its ambitions and its pathetic, confused hopes. It is published by Harcourt, Brace and Co.

Finds Men Now Live Only at the Mercy of Corporate Power

THE REVOLUTION that so many people have been worrying about lately has already happened. It began in 1900, or thereabouts, and reached its climax in the stock market catastrophe of 1929, and it left us in a state of confusion from which we have barely begun to emerge.

So says Frederick Lewis Allen, author of "Only Yesterday," in an engrossing book entitled "The Lords of Creation."

His book is a study of the tremendous growth of corporate power during the last generation. This, he says, was a true revolution. It divorced ownership from control of the greatest industries, gave men enormous power without responsibility, broke down old conceptions of business ethics and put men at the mercy of a mad financial free-for-all whose leaders were symbols of troubles rather than causes of them.

He examines in some detail the rise of giant corporations, beginning with J. P. Morgan's organization of the U.S. Steel more than thirty years ago and continuing down through the dizzy gyrations of the Insulls, the Van Sweringens, the Mitchells, and so on. And all this, he says, brought about nothing less than a revolution in the American way of life.

Old standards were swept away. Men were put at the mercy of the promoters, the combiners. The corporate lawyer, he says, is always two jumps ahead of the legislator, and frequently at least that far ahead of his own conscience. And men wound up by getting in a fearful mess, from which they are not even now certain that they are going to emerge successfully.

The book is a worthy sequel to "Only Yesterday." Harpers publishes it.

An encyclopedia should be in every home. Then you could answer all the questions Junior asked.

Walter Duranty Tells How Trotzky Missed His Biggest Chance

TROTZKY would probably be the boss of Russia now in place of Stalin if he had only had the political sense to go to Lenin's funeral.

So says Walter Duranty, famous foreign correspondent of The New York Times, in his new book, "I Write as I Please." He explains his statement thus:

Stalin at that time was only beginning to seize the Communist party machinery. Trotzky was infinitely more popular with the army and the masses. He was, furthermore, an unparalleled orator and a man of dominating, magnetic personality.

Lenin died, leaving all Russia gasping. His funeral was a great occasion. Trotzky could have appeared, focused attention on himself and orated Stalin right out of his job. But instead he sulked in the Crimea, let his golden opportunity slip—and finally found his rival too strong to be overthrown.

This bit of inside history is only one of the many absorbing tales included in Mr. Duranty's fat book. He recounts the whole of his post-war experiences as a newspaperman in Europe, when he saw history being made and had an unerring eye for the important moments. He gives priceless pictures of Russia and its people, and of the mad turmoil of the early 'twenties.

We do not know what the best novel, the best biography or the best book of poetry of 1935 may be. But we are just about willing to declare this to be the most solidly interesting book of the year.

This English Girl Nice, But a Little Homicidal

PROBABLY it is too bad that human depravity should be so much more interesting than simple, unadorned goodness; but that's the way life seems to be, and as a result it is our duty to inform you that "The Fair Devil," by Edwin Greenwood, is a right entertaining book.

Mr. Greenwood tells about one of these young ladies who are fair without, but full of the blackness of darkness within. Specifically, his heroine is a young English girl who lives in a suburb, apparently leads the most blameless of lives as a London stenographer, and becomes the fiancee of an innocent Church of England clergyman.

The girl is pretty, charming and altogether lovely. Her only trouble is that she just hasn't a moral to her back.

To get pin-money she consorts improperly with a wealthy nobleman in a London love-nest. When he gets troublesome, she unceremoniously kills him.

To bind the clergyman closer to her, she throws suspicion his way, so that she may win his complete gratitude and trust by sticking to him. When a maiden aunt becomes too troublesome, she calmly poisons her; and the clergyman—who by this time has married the girl—escapes just in time by getting wise to her as she is meditating a dose of arsenic for his tea.

There is no especial moral to this tale; indeed, Mr. Greenwood has told it with a flip, airy cheerfulness which is very charming. His only purpose seems to be to entertain, and he succeeds in it admirably. It is published by Doubleday, Doran and Co.

ONE GLORY will always remain in the crown of Mr. Roosevelt; he did do something about it (the depression). The value of that precedent is inestimable. —Gen. Hugh Johnson.

Finds Rich Comedy In News Headliners

STANLEY WALKER, who used to be a newspaperman himself, seems to have written "Mrs. Astor's Horse" to get even with all the stuffed shirts he used to have to take seriously.

It is a book about the general screwiness of our modern civilization, and it singles out a dozen or so chief headliners for analysis as essentially comic characters. When he was a New York city editor, Mr. Walker had to treat such folk as if they really amounted to something; now he has at them with a bladder on the end of a stick.

He goes, for instance, into the career of the late ineffable Daddy Browning, examines Aimee Semple McPherson with tender care, recalls how Queen Marie came, discusses Jimmy Walker and Earl Carroll, devotes pages to the "civic greetings" which New York used to shower on distinguished visitors and indulges in a number of fearfully barbed comments in New York's so-called society.

He tells about the Valentino funeral and about the marvels of interior decorating which can be observed in New York's beauty salons. He writes of that super-circus spectacle, the Hauptmann trial, and then turns to a discussion of Lucy Cotton Thomas and Gen. Hugh S. Johnson.

The result is a sardonic and comic book. The country, says Mr. Walker, seems to go nuts every so often, and here is the proof of it, as a New York newspaperman has beheld it. You will get many a laugh out of it—and you may find it a trifle dismaying as well. It is published by Stokes

English Visitor Finds Some Good Things In United States

A. G. MACDONELL'S "A Visit to America" is a witty and good-natured account of his travels and travails on this continent during the fall of 1934, declares it is foolish for foreigners to compare United States with any one European nation.

The United States, he says, is nothing less than a continent in itself, and it can fairly be compared only with Europe as a whole. It has its wild and lawless areas, for instance, as Europe has its Balkans; but to compare it with Germany or England, which do not have such areas, is unjust, for Germany and England are only small parts of the European ensemble.

This English visitor seems to have enjoyed himself immensely and his book provokes a long series of chuckles, since he writes with a deft, unlabored wit—as, for instance, when he says that American football combines the less pleasant features of English rugby and the World War.

He liked Boston, Baltimore, Helena, Mont., Salt Lake City, San Francisco and Louisville, Ky., very much indeed. He did not care so much for Chicago, Butte, Los Angeles and most of Texas.

He found New York restaurant cooking atrocious and Kentucky cooking divine. Amazingly, he reports that auto traffic manners on this side are far better than those of England. He has written a pleasant book. Macmillan publishes it.

Scotland Yard Story

IN "THE SULLEN SKY MYSTERY" H. C. Bailey (Crime Club) reintroduces that old Englishman, Joshua Clunk, a sanctimonious little shyster lawyer who goes about humming hymns, confounding Scotland Yard, and solving abstruse murder cases, and an engaging figure he is.

We have a corpse found on a beach, an ex-convict in a position of deep suspicion, and some high-powered shenanigans by Mr. Clunk. The tale is highly satisfactory from start to finish.

Catherine the Great Her Queer Husband and Her Lovers

IN HER latest book, "Catherine the Great," Miss Gina Kaus tells in simple but arresting language the life story of this woman, who for thirty-six years sat on the throne of "all the Russias."

Terrible, indeed, is the history of the married life of young Catherine, tied to a neurotic husband who, says Miss Kaus—

"Would never ask for happiness from her, nor wish to make her happy; she could never be his wife and partner, but only his enemy. . . . He scorned her and ran after other women. Without displaying the least jealousy—on the contrary, with a certain degree of pleasure—he suffered and encouraged her intimacies with other men. He subjected her to every insult a woman can endure, and what made the outrage a thousand times worse was that the whole Court, and in a certain sense even the whole of Europe, witnessed her humiliation."

Little wonder that Catherine, "as tender and loving as any other woman of warm and natural desires," should have lovers, Orlov Poniatovsky and all the others.

But they were by no means her whole life. Catherine "felt herself born to be a ruler," and rule she did—to such good effect that just before her death, Peter the Great's dream of uniting Courland with Russia, and making Russia mistress of the Baltic, had been realized.

And when she died—with a laugh on her lips—"All the people who had known her personally . . . wept bitterly. Beyond the frontiers kings and rebels drew a sigh of relief; she had excited the envy of the one and intimidated the other. Only the Russian people remained unmoved by her death. Inside her palace she had been a kind Little Mother, on the throne a victorious monarch, but the people themselves had benefited neither by her kindness nor her victories. She was not to blame. She had aspired to the best, and achieved the possible. The time factor was against her—for she lived in advance of her age."

MUSIC OF THE DAY—By G. J. D.

NOVEL CONCERT MOVEMENT

AN EXPERIMENT in education, and a novel concert movement, is that of the London Children's Concerts, now entering its thirteenth year of activity. These concerts have been so successful, particularly since 1930, that some anxiety is felt they may even get out of hand by reason of a continous expansion, and the difficulty of organization is already very great. The booking of orchestras, conductors and halls in the many different places where the concerts are given have demanded much thought and work, and this season, most of the orchestras with whom the concerts are associated, are exceptionally busy, especially the London Philharmonic.

TO FILL LONDON'S SCHOOLS WITH "MAKERS OF MUSIC"

FOR OVER twelve years it has been the ambition of one Robert Mayer to fill London's schools with "makers of music," and during this period, thanks to his achievements, he has seen this making of music, or creation and eager training of school orchestras, grow every year.

Not only the success of the children's concerts themselves, but their effect on musical education has proved particularly gratifying. The range of music has been made as wide as possible, and a careful selection of works made that will appeal to all ages, not easy matters where there are varied audiences of children, rich and poor, some of them as young as four years old. For instance, such music as the Nocturne and Scherzo from Mendelssohn's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," excerpts from the "Messiah," Vaughan's brilliant "The Wasps," and "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Overture by Nicolai.

MODERN MUSIC, TOO

A FAIR AMOUNT of modern music is included in the programmes, such as Arthur Bliss, Holst, Hamilton, Harty, Sibelius and Prokofiev, and this season will include music from Weber's "Oberon," Purcell's "King Arthur" suite, Gustav Holst's "The Planets," and Rossini's "William Tell," in the concerts at Newcastle, Leeds, Huddersfield and a score of other large provincial centres,—for the first time, Coventry, Grimsby, Doncaster, Wakefield and York. Some of these centres have already been visited.

Mr. Mayer says he "wants to vitalize music teaching in the schools, for after all, what would modern life be without music, not only the hearing of music, but what is more important, the making of music." To stimulate musical activity is evidently one of his greatest ideals, and he finds gratification in the great assistance given him by teachers, directors of education, and members of civic and local authorities who have linked themselves with the movement. The help, too, of one of England's most distinguished musicians, Dr. Malcolm Sargent, who for some years has conducted the Saturday morning concerts and the London Philharmonic Orchestra, has been very valuable.

DOZENS OF SCHOOL ORCHESTRAS

THE ITEMS selected are always of short duration, and a programme never lasts more than an hour and a quarter. It is interesting to learn that through the movement dozens of school orchestras have come into existence with surprising quickness. In the case of a school just outside London a few strings and a piano, formed by an enthusiastic teacher less than a year ago, had practically a full orchestra before the summer holidays commenced.

Of all "isms" let it then be remarked, that optimism is the most beautiful of all, and not for the first occasion has it been said here that the time will come when no school which accounts itself first class will be satisfied unless it has its own orchestra, or some instrumental ensemble identified with its school life.

MOUNTAINS AND MUSIC

MANY MODERN writers have written and still write with evident musical sentimentality, and fluently and most interestingly. One of these books has come to hand, by Vivienne de Watteville, written about her travels and adventures in her "Speak to the Earth," wanderings and reflections among elephants and mountains. Some years ago Miss de Watteville accompanied her father on an expedition in tropical Africa, the object of which was to collect specimens of big game for a museum. Her father met with a tragic accident and since his death her chief desire has been to visit their old haunts again and to live with nature. Her endurance, intrepidity, photography, dangers and intensifications of solitude—interspersed with the music she took with her in the jungle—are all very charming reading.

And what music did she select for such a trip? Here she says "how delightful it was to listen under the stars to a Beethoven or a Schubert trio, the former's 'Archduke' trio, particularly," for she realizes that of all the composers' works she took with her, Beethoven went the best with the mountains. His "Seventh Symphony" has now been played on the solitary slopes of Kenya Mountain (see recent African "war" maps for Kenya), 10,000 feet up. Was it not Whitman who used to test his poems this way? It's the first time, however, one has heard of Beethoven in the high altitudes of Africa, and how supremely appropriate and undivided in attention would be the first movement of the "Hammerclavier" sonata.

"BIRD-SONG"

AND HOW BEAUTIFUL is her description when she hears bird-song in the bush: "Theirs (the bush-cuckoos) is the sweetest, most lingering song of the veld. One of them pipes a hesitating, falling chromatic, each note liquid as a drop of water, and the other takes it from the bottom note of the octave and comes up, so that their voices meet in the middle and cross and come back again. Even the memory of it evokes a picture of the wilds so poignant and filled with regret that you can smell the brittle grass and the cooling dust. For they sang during that time of the day when the shadows overflowed in pools of lilac, and the plains ran out to the edge of the world in rippling gold under the almost lilac sky of the evening."

STANFORD SKETCH HERE IN 1929

FOLLOWING the reference to more Stanford and Parry works made two weeks ago in this column, and from inquiries of a music student and a conductor, a sketch of the life of Sir Charles Villiers Stanford appeared in The Victoria Times, bearing the date October 12, 1929. In the plea for local attention to his works, the article may be repeated. At the same date, too, The Times music column drew attention to the new life of Handel, written in the enthusiastic and voluminous style by Newman Flower, who has also completed a book on Schubert.

This Handel volume occupied four years of Flower's life; nothing escaped him, and it is only by reading the history of Handel's father—George Handel—that one realizes how near to not being born at all the famous composer was. Only a few weeks now when once more his beloved "Messiah" will be heard at the Cathedral.

RE "STRANGE AS IT SEEMS"

IN "STRANGE AS IT SEEMS" in The Times issue of Monday evening last (November 18), a sketch and a brief reference were included of Count Geza Zichy—"who lost his right arm as a boy—became one of the greatest pianists of his time (1849-1924)." Geza Zichy (Zit'che), Count Vasony-Keo, was born in Hungary, July 12, 1849, and was the son of a Hungarian noble. He was passionately fond of music, but when a boy music student at the age of fourteen he lost his right arm on a hunting expedition (September, 1863). So bent was he on continuing his music studies that by dint of unconquerable energy he became a left-handed piano-virtuoso of astonishing and brilliant attainments. His instructors were Karl Mayoberger, composer-pianist of Vienna; Volkmann, distinguished instrumental composer of Saxony, and the great master, Franz Liszt, at Pest, one of the three places in which Liszt lived during the last years of his life, and at the time when a throng of pupils and admirers followed him from each of the three districts (Weimar, Pest and Rome).

Count Vasony-Keo was also a member of the legal profession, and an incumbent of high positions, but he found time to give many concerts, and even undertook extended pianistic tours, for charitable purposes. On several occasions he played in public with his master, Liszt, an arrangement of the latter's "Rakoczy" march for three hands, and up to his forty-third year he was president of the Hungarian National Academy of Music, and later held similar prominent positions.

He has written a melodrama, a cantata ("Dolores"), a four-act romantic opera, a three-act opera, a ballet, a collection of studies and pianoforte pieces for the left hand alone, some songs and part-songs. Before he died, in 1914 he completed his great trilogy: 1, "Rakoczy"; 2, "Nemo"; 3, "Rodosta."

THE "SWISS COUNT"

THIS IS reminded of the "Swiss Count," John James Heidegger, an old court favorite and a notable manager of the Opera House in the Haymarket (London), in the eighteenth middle century. Heidegger was the son of a Zurich pastor of Switzerland, but went to England, and while he was at the Haymarket he attracted the notice of George II, who made him Master of the Revels and Superintendent of Masquerades to the royal household.

From a favorite he became an autocrat, and no festival, ball or concert was considered complete until the details had been submitted to and passed by the Swiss adventurer. Though tall and well made, Heidegger was extraordinarily ugly. He had, however, the good sense to treat his ugliness as a joke, and one day made a bet with the Earl of Chesterfield that the latter could not find an uglier face in all London

The earl, after an exhaustive search, found a woman in St. Giles's whose face he considered even more repulsive than that of the Master of the Revels; but when Heidegger put on the woman's head-dress it was agreed unanimously that he had won his wager. At this time he was making the then princely income of $25,000 a year, and gave most elaborate entertainments to his friends. Even the King condescended to visit him at his house at Barn-Elms.

Although an epicure and a heavy drinker, Heidegger lived to the age of ninety, and in spite of his extreme ugliness—

He lies buried in Richmond Church.

FROM TAILOR TO OPERA TENOR

A BERLIN paper has reported how a tailor of that city, Albert Hansmuller, has been "discovered" as a singer, and that he has laid aside his needle and scissors and has been engaged as principal light tenor at the famous Reuss Theatre of Gera.

His father was killed in the Great War, and he began tailoring at an early age. While he was still young his voice showed great promise and his mother was persuaded to take him to the Berlin Conservatore, where he was told that he was "completely without talent." Hansmuller, however, continued singing, and leaving the tailor's board tried to earn his living by singing at various beer gardens. But failing to make a living, he once more returned to tailoring.

Recently while he was singing at his work an aria from "Aida," a customer heard him and became enthusiastic with his voice and singing. The customer was no less than the director of the Gera Theatre. Hansmuller's voice was tried and tested, and he will begin by singing the tenor roles in "Carmen" and other operas.

A VOLUME of 664 pages, containing Lives of twenty-nine composers, with the title "Music" has just been published in London. The book is uniform with "The Musical Companion," beautifully produced and for all its 664 pages slips easily into the pocket.

It is said there is "nothing on the same lines ever published," and "is indispensable both to experienced music lovers and to that vast new public which is beginning to enjoy music by wireless and gramophone."

Each of the Lives is written by a well-known musician: Sir Richard Terry writes the life of Palestrina; Edwin Evans, that of Berlioz; F. Bonavia, that of Brahms, and so on. There is an introduction by Dr. H. C. Colles, the famous editor of Grove's Dictionary, and its editor is Bacharach, who edited "The Musical Companion."

Creating Money

By SIR THOMAS WHITE

DURING the recent election campaign and of late years in the debates in Parliament the assertion was frequently heard, and no doubt confidently believed by many, that all bank deposits are made by bankers themselves and that "money" is thus created by mere bookkeeping entries in the ledgers of the chartered banks.

Not so long ago we had the privilege of a visit from a very distinguished theologian in the person of Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, D.D., Dean of Canterbury, who voiced this theory in the strongest terms. At his meeting in Toronto the worthy dean is reported to have expressed himself as follows: "Bankers create money out of nothing. Bankers lie when they say they borrow money and then lend it out again. They make money out of the blue."

Both those engaged in banking, and the producing and mercantile classes of the community who use bank credit, would indeed be surprised and relieved if this revelation as to the ease with which money can be created were indeed true. But questionings must undoubtedly have arisen even on the part of the general public who, although not skilled in the technique of banking, nevertheless have a fair grip upon plain, everyday common sense, and are slow to believe that something can be made out of nothing.

* * * *

THE QUERY naturally arises: How have the many exponents of this theory reached a conviction so greatly at variance with fact? Merely by adopting without critical examination the catch-cry, "Bankers create deposits by making loans." From the partial truth embodied in this assertion they jump to the fallacious conclusion that deposits are illusory and can be swollen to any desired amount by the simple process of loaning with or without security. Some go further and appear to contend that even the making of loans is unessential for the purpose, and that deposits can be created by merely entering figures in deposit ledgers or by converting the blue sky of heaven into credit with which to supply the borrowing needs of a great nation. Surely there are Marco Polos in these latter days of exploration in the realms of banking technique.

It is a fact that when a loan is made by a bank to a farmer, a manufacturer or other borrower a credit called a deposit is set up in his favor in the books of the bank. This is to enable him to draw cheques against this deposit, with which he pays for labor and supplies necessary to the operations of his business of creating products, from the sale of which he will repay his bank loan and make his ultimate profit. The proceeds of the credit or deposit so drawn upon find their way back to the bank or other banks by way of individual deposits of those to whom the proceeds of the credit were paid by the borrowers, or others with whom they dealt. But the essential point is that against the credit or deposit in his favor the capital of the borrower in question—that is to say, his actual wealth and, if the loan is made for productive purposes, the value of his production during the continuance of the loan—becomes security to the bank for repayment of the loan. If this were not deemed adequate security by the bank the loan and the so-called deposit would never have come into being. Credits, therefore, instead of being manufactured out of "blue sky" or by "bookkeeping entries," rest upon the financial worth or capital and business capabilities of borrowers, whose aggregate loans, so secured, are shown on the assets side of banks' balance sheets. This vital and fundamental principle of banking is entirely overlooked by those who, like the dean, contend that bank credit is "created out of nothing."

NECESSARY BANK RESERVES

ANOTHER vital feature of banking is also overlooked. When credits are created in favor of customers, whether borrowers or savings depositors, a bank must be always prepared to meet cash demands of depositors and cheques drawn and deposited with other banks against these credits by payment through the daily bank clearings, not in their own notes, but in legal tender which is issued, not by the banks, but by the Bank of Canada. This is the reason why a bank must always keep "liquid" to the extent found necessary under the experience of bankers in the conduct of their business along safe lines. To maintain the requisite degree of liquidity, varying with varying conditions, banks must hold a considerable percentage of their assets (about 10 per cent of their liabilities in normal times) in legal tender—that is to say Bank of Canada notes, or, what is the same thing, deposits with the Bank of Canada. They also hold a much greater precentage in short-date government securities which can be readily converted into legal tender if required. The legal tender yields them no interest and the short-date government securities a very low rate as compared with commercial loans. In addition to these immediately liquid resources, banks carry secondary reserves in longer-date government securities, industrial and other bonds and call loans upon stocks and bonds. The aggregate of credit which banks can safely extend at any given time is thus conditioned by the degree of liquidity which they possess through the holding of legal tender and their secondary reserves.

* * * *

FROM THE foregoing it will be seen that under a sound system of banking the obligations of banks to their customers must be at all times secured by the financial resources of those who borrow from them, whether producers who require temporary credit pending the creation and marketing of their finished products, or governments in respect of their securities, or borrowers against bonds and stocks.

When bankers thus create "deposits" in favor of borrowers for convenience in the operation of their credits, such deposits represent the sums borrowed, which, as stated, are deemed to be adequately secured by actual wealth existing at the date of the loans, or, in the case of loans for productive purposes, come into being as a result of the proceeds of the credits being chequed out by the borrowers to enable them to pay for labor, raw materials and other necessary items entering into the cost of production of their finished product.

Credits are not, therefore, manufactured out of nothing, blue sky, or by bookkeeping entries, but against real wealth, which through the technique of banking is rendered liquid to serve the financial needs of the agriculture, industry and commerce of the nation.

AN ORIGINAL thought is dynamite. If you advance one, it would blow the whole system of education to hell.

By DONN SUTTON

NEW YORK.

THE CUSTOM-BUILT typewriters of Manhattan's dramatic and music critics—which presumably contain reinforced capital I's and other combination keys that will produce, at a single tap of the finger, such phrases as "brave and throbbing play," "inspired and significant theme" and "rich and delightful harmony"—were heard to clatter in unfamiliar concert the other evening.

For two new dramatic-musical spectacles, come to swell the infant season's list of productions, demanded the sage presence of both divisions of the critical fraternity.

There was the Gershwin-Heyward folk opera, "Porgy and Bess," casting its swaying shadows and deep-throated tunes against the stage walls of the Alvin Theatre, and there were the mad-cap Russians of Colonel W. de Basil's Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, going ahead by leaps and bounds in the time-ripened setting of the Metropolitan Opera House.

Dramatic critic and music critic, bowing to each other across the ample aisle of the Alvin and from the red-plush seats of the Met., found both presentations exceeding good to the eye and to the ear.

IN YOUR notebook of "Things to See When I Go to New York," you may safely list "Porgy and Bess" as Event Number One of the new theatrical year.

Grotesque silhouettes of upraised arms and open-fingered hands and bobbing negroid heads; the stirring orchestral effect of husky voices, whisking brooms, rhymthmic rug-beaters and harmonious hammering that sound forth from front stoops and upstairs windows along Charleston's Catfish Row; the grim whine of an off-stage hurricane and the fear-filled wails of a primitive folk; the musical dawn cries of street vendors, savage lust in the creeping darkness of a palmetto jungle, a hopelessly hopeful cripple's pathetic love for a literally scarlet woman, murder and mammies, sin and soul-saving, peddlers of strawberries and peddlers of dope . . . these are the violent moods which George Gershwin and DuBose Heyward have molded into a home-made opera.

It is the Heyward play "Porgy" of eight years ago, returned now with a score, singing actors (or acting singers), and the name of the wayward "Bess" added to the title. It is an answer to the layman, who, bewildered by foreign-born operatic presentations, often has inquired: "Why can't there be an opera written in the 'American' language?" Critics differed as to its operatic values, but radio singers and dance-bandmasters, you can be sure, will relay to the far corners of the land such tunes as "I Got Plenty o' Nuttin'," "A Woman Is a Sometime Thing" or "There's a Boat That's Leavin' Soon for New York."

The crippled Porgy strives to have and to hold his woman, Bess.

Individual mention: Anne Brown as Bess, drugged by cocaine and sex... the acting and singing of Tod Duncan (who incidentally is head of the Howard College music department), as the lame and lonely Porgy...the singing of Ruby Elzy as Serena while the dimes clink into a saucer which holds the burial fund for her murdered husband...the exuberant dancing of John Bubbles as the good-for-nuttin' Sportin' Life.

And if a crap game never before has occurred to you as being operatic material, you are referred to the first act scene in Catfish Row.

YOU WILL NOT have to come to New York to see the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo—the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo is coming to see you. That is, if you live in or near one of the 112 cities in the United States and Canada which are on its itinerary.

This correspondent is a peasant who never was privileged to see the immortal Nijinsky in one of his tumultous leaps, who never sat proudly in a box to witness the old Imperial Ballet of Czarist Russia and who could not even let out a self-conscious cry of "Bravo!" or "Bis, Bis" from his aisle seat at the Met. without turning the shade of a great big juicy beet. Consequently, he is untroubled by comparisons with the hallowed ballets of yore, and is able to report that the Ballet Russe is a splendid show that offers more broad-jumping and fleet-footedness than a track and field meet, an Arabian Nights orgy that would make a Hollywood champagne party look like a meeting of the Ladies' Sewing Circle and more color than the flags of all nations displayed against an aurora borealis background.

Undoubtedly this is a crude report of a really beautiful spectacle, but if it will lure to the box office a number of strong, silent men who might otherwise be inclined to regard the ballet as sissy entertainment, it will have served a noble purpose.

If you have handy a pencil and paper (the reverse side of last week's laundry slip will do), you may wish to make note of the unpronouncable names of Luboy Tchernicheva, who excels as the faithless Zobeide; Yurek Shabelevsky, who is radiant as the favorite slave; Tatiana Riabouchinska, whose solo dancing is a delight.

Bakst's colorful original costumes and settings make riotous and luxuriant pageantry of the Rimsky-Korsakoff "Scherezade," the famous "Le Mariage d'Aurore" and de Falla's "Three-Cornered Hat."

St. Andrew

How Scots and Others Came to Dance In His Honor

From a Woman Correspondent

WE HAVE been reading that on Friday, November 29, St. Andrew's Eve, Victoria Scots and others are to dance at a ball in the Crystal Ballroom at the Empress Hotel.

On that same night throughout the world there will probably be a couple of thousand other St. Andrew's balls. In fact, wherever there is a square of tartan or a Scottish burr, the bagpipes will skirl and Scottish feet dance eightsome reels.

Why?

Because, says you, St. Andrew is the patron saint of Scotland.

Ah, but there is more to it than that. St. George is the patron saint of England, and St. David of Wales, but you don't find either the English or the Welsh tripping the light fantastic on those particular festivals—not to any great extent. They discourse heavily and a bit weightily but as a rule they don't trip. The Irish come off a bit better on St. Patrick's Day. But then they would. It has something to do with snakes.

* * * *

BUT HIGH JINKS on St. Andrew's Day can be traced back into the mists of antiquity, where they get lost among the trackless paths of nebulous mythology.

St. Andrew himself was the first apostle—fisherman of Bethsaida and the brother of St. Peter. True, his acts and gospel were later declared aprocryphal by the Fathers and Decretum Gelasu. Which, considering his martyrdom, has always seemed to me particularly bad luck. But they had a good deal of weight and popularity in the first Christian years.

As was the cheery way of the Romans before capital punishment, St. Andrew was almost scourged to ribbons before being crucified de cussata. Which means on a cross the shape of an "x." This was in 70 A.D., at Patrea, an uncomfortable little place in Asia Minor. Especially uncomfortable, one suspects, for poor St. Andrew.

And for two days, 'tis said, he hung on the cross adying, and preaching gentle words of peace and exhortation to the awed crowd.

Somewhere about 760 A.D., according to the "Chronicle of the Picts and Scots," "ye relikis of Sanct Andrew ye Apostle cam to Scotland." And it was not long before he became the patron saint of the countryside, such miracles did they work, ousting, incidentally, the reputation of St. Rule or Regulus, also curiously enough from Patrea, whom tradition, says was the first to try and convert the Pict and Scottish peasantry to Christianity. But then what is one saint's meat is another's poison.

The height of St. Andrew's fame came when, or so it is related in Leslie's "History of Scotland," King Aonglas (modernized version, Angus) saw the Cross of St. Andrew, that same de cussata cross on which the unfortunate fisherman was martyred, appear to him in the sky on the eve of a terrific battle with the Saxon Athelstane. When next day Angus went ahead and soundly trounced Athelstane and the Saxon forces, the vision was deemed propitious and St. Andrew formally adopted as the patron saint of Scotland, with his memory day fixed in the calendar of the church for November 30.

* * * *

NOW, AS HERETOFORE November 30 had been sacred to Freyr, Norse god of marriage, fertility, peace and plenty, whose worship had come to Scotland from the plains of Sweden, martyred old St. Andrew just naturally fell heir to all the honors formerly paid to Freyer.

These included black cats—much beloved by Freyja, the goddess of love and Freyr's wife—love omens of many kinds and dancing; especially dancing.

True, before Scotland became Christianized, dancing on Freyr's Day and eve had more than a tendency towards saturnalia. In fact authorities hint at more than nudism—a sort of witches' sabbath being the order of the night. But

"To Andrew all the lovers and the lustie wooers come,
Believing through his ayde and certain ceremonies done
(While as to him they presents bring and conjure all the night
To have good lucke and to obtain their chief and sweete delight.)"

In one of Buchan's books—the name I cannot this moment remember—he uses these St. Andrew love signs and potents to good effect and shows they are still prevalent in rural parts of Scotland.

Modernized St. Andrew's celebrations are valued not only socially but as occasions when the stirring dances of Scotland, the eightsome reels, "The Reel of Taloch" and the "Seann Truibhas," such as will be danced at the Empress Hotel by the officers of the Sixteenth Canadian Scottish and their wives, will come again into their own and recall the poetry and splendor of that mountain land across the Atlantic waves.—G.C.

Writing a Book?

Only Solid Work Can Bring Peace of Mind to Genuine Author

From a London Correspondent

I MAY as well answer those pests who insist on writing to me for a solution of the problem which seems to torment such an alarming percentage of the population of this country at any rate: "How shall I write my novel?"

"Why write it at all?" is the obvious rejoinder.

But so many people are apt to take this as just a joke.

There is no magical formula, of course. The intending novelist has only one course open to him or her. He or she must get down to the job. That is all. In order to write, one must write. The result, I hasten to add, should then be sent to an established literary agent—the only person who invites the infliction.

The chances then are that the effect will be sufficiently chastening to turn the would-be writer to more sensible occupations, such as gardening, solving crossword puzzles or collecting stamps.

The trouble is that so many vaguely ambitious individuals think it is largely a question of waiting for that precious moment of "inspiration" or settling down to a nice long talk about writing—rather than taking off their coats and sweating at the solitary hard labor involved.

This does not daunt the genuine authors-to-be. For they know that it is only solid work that can bring them any peace of mind.

* * * *

HOW TRUE this is was illustrated to me only this week. I met a man who is now an established literary success. For reasons that are fairly obvious, I cannot mention his name. But it is a fact that he is to-day considered one of the greatest fiction writers of the day. As soon as they are published, his books are snapped up by the hungry buyers, borrowers and stealers of Novels That Must Be Read.

Well, he made me an interesting confession. He had his first book published with comparative ease. He wrote a second—and no publisher would look at it. He wrote a third. It suffered the same fate. He wrote a fourth. The same thing happened. "I suppose I just couldn't hit it," he told me reflectively.

But nothing could stop him. He wrote his fifth book. It was accepted. His second published work, it was an immediate success. Now everything he writes is worth money.

You see, he just went on writing.

* * * *

OF COURSE, in this case, as in many others, it is quite probable that the omniscient publishers made a mistake in not accepting the manuscripts in between his first and second published book. For publishers' readers are often singularly blind to the possibilities of the MSS. before them.

Take, for instance, Halliday Sutherland's "Arches of the Years." Publisher after publisher returned it with the customary "regrets." The author had practicaly given up all hope.

But there was still another firm to which he had not submitted his memoirs. He sent it along.

It was accepted. As soon as it was in print it attracted attention. For two years now it has been a world's "best seller." It is now in its twenty-second large edition—and still selling furiously.

Dr. Sutherland's second book, "A Time To Keep," has meanwhile appeared and is doing extremely well, too.

There is, also, the other end of the scale of creative writing. I refer to the appalling bilge that is printed month after month, year after year, stuff that is either so silly or so nauseating that to publish it seems almost a criminal offence. Heaven knows what induces the publishers to trade in this kind of rubbish.

VERSE

TO A CHARMING LADY WHO HATH LEFT HOUSE AND HOME AND GONE AWAY TO VISIT THE GREAT CITY

Time goeth on leaden feet,
Here where his steps were fleet
To follow down the days
Your swift and lovely ways.
Insooth, I like him not,
The drunken, dragging sot.
He hath abjured all pace,
Now that he knows your face
Otherwhere; and no more
Finds aught to hurry for.
Thus Tim, foul caitiff oaf;
Now sits him down to loaf;
And grins at my disaster
Who urge him to move faster.
He grunts: "I will not stir
Til you fetch back your Her.
Till she is here once more
I'll sprawl across your door."

SUNLIGHT

By Helen Welshimer

THE sun makes halos here and there
For unprotected heads to wear.

It throws its ribbons on the street
Like shining rugs for people's feet.

IT ties its gold in loops and bows
On people's shabby-looking clothes.

And watching faces you can tell
That hearts today are feeling well!

Getting Along

Spoiling Men Widens Differences Between Sexes

By HELEN WELSHIMER

MEN AND WOMEN are human beings before the distinction between sexes occurs. But once the segregation takes place it requires some pretty strenuous efforts to get them back on the same plane again.

There is the matter of food, for instance. If a man likes onion soup, he expects his wife to like it, too. If he does not want her to try it, the chances are that his love needs replenishing or he would insist that she share the delicacy.

A woman—to move across the table, and back to the family kitchen—will prepare a dessert that her husband likes regardless of her own dislike of it. It's a sign she loves him.

A man is hurt unless his wife likes his best friend, at once, hanging a rosary of approval around her neck of dear old Ed or Pete or Joe.

A woman breathes naturally again when her husband remarks that he doesn't see what she likes in Mary or Sue or Kate.

A man sets out on a transoceanic flight and is queried about air tides and currents and technicalities, while the woman who goes along is asked what she is putting in the lunch boxes.

WOMEN SPORT THEIR MEN FOLKS

FOR EVERY difference there is a reason. Women have spoiled men always. They have forgotten their own pains when a man had a cut finger in order to minister to his comfort. They have led him to expect the food that best suits a pampered palate. They have told him that any food is twice as sweet if it is the one he chooses, and let the tray of French pastries go by while they concentrate on stewed apricots—if he wanted them.

Why should they believe us when we work so hard to deceive them?

A man has more egotism than a woman. He is not afraid that his wife will notice that Ed or Pete or Joe has a better waistline than he has. Or what if she does? He is sure that he is loved for something of his own so he saves himself a lot of needless worry.

A woman, on the other hand, has had to fight her way through lopsided competition and it is music to her ears every time she receives an announcement that she has taken another hurdle. She has not quite learned the great difference between those two small words—liking and loving.

HISTORIC FAMILY SETUP EXPLAINS DIVISION OF DUTIES

THAT MATTER of the preservation of various parts of the anatomy has a good firm foundation, too. A famous beauty expert, Rose Laird, explained all that the other day.

"Men have to twist their necks when they shave and put in collar buttons when they dress, so of course they retain their youthful contour. Women forget to exercise their neck muscles since they are not required to do it in the process of dressing. When it comes to hair, women have the advantage. They crush their hair and exercise it when they arrange it. Men don't perform these mechanics. They wear tight hats, too. Consequently the upper half of a woman's head is younger than a man's but the lower half of a man's head is younger than a woman's.

The whole setup of family life—and you can be as prehistoric as you please about it—explains the division of duties in a family. In her delightful travel narrative, "North to the Orient," Anne Morrow Lindbergh says that the reporters questioned Colonel Lindbergh on technicalities about his trip.

"Oh, Mrs. Lindbergh, the women are so anxious to know about your clothes," one woman reporter addressed her.

"Where do you put the lunch boxes?" another asked.

It is true, too. No man cared what Charles Lindbergh wore, but women did want to know how his wife looked.

Men and women are different. It's a very good thing that we are. We get along much better.

Wealth In Songs

A NEWS ITEM from the east tells how king of the song-pluggers, Rocco Vocco (not a gag; it's his real name), is being honored by Tin Pan Alley with a testimonial dinner. This is news of a man-bites-dog nature since it is the first time band leaders have chipped in to feast a tune peddler.

But Rocco Vocco, who has plugged songs for thirty-one years, between the Battery and Frisco, is no ordinary song salesman. From Paul Whiteman and Abe Lyman down the line, "Rock," as he is known along the music market, has friends and acquaintances in any popular orchestra aggregation.

Song-plugging, "Rock" Vocco was sadly telling me, is not what it was in the old days before talking pictures and the radio, when a melody could click after constant repetitions by the late Nora Bayes, or Eddie Cantor, and sell a million sheet-music copies. Vocco is the man who once bought a catchy tune Fred Menken submitted as "Wabash Blues" for $50 and did not hear the end of its popularity until the profits came to $300,000. He is also the fellow who spread a million copies of Gus Kahn's "Toot-Toot-Tootsy" around the country. And other Tin Pan Alley products he has successfully peddled include "No, No, Norah," "Goodbye Broadway, Hello France," which you must have heard, sometime or other, on a tiny nickelodeon.

It was in 1904 that Vocco started in this good-time-charlie vocation at a First Ward Democratic ball in Chicago. Harry von Tilzer, the famous composer, asked Vocco to climb up to the platform and sing a ditty called, "Bedelia, I Wanna Stealya." Vocco sang this piece so well it became Chicago's anthem during the ensuing month and other cities took to whistling it afterward. And Vocco was installed by Von Tilzer in the song-plugging business. Now, he is the most popular man in the profession.

Press Agenting

From a Correspondent

SPEAKING of press agents, someone mentioned Louise Sachen, "the girl from Alaska," who created some rumpus back in 1917. Louise is the maid who stepped up to a New York hotel desk and in the register, gave her home as Nome, Alaska. An enterprising press agent dashed to the phones and informed the press of his find, an Alaskan miss who had never been to New York before. The papers adopted Louise the Chamber of Commerce feted her. Until one skeptic investigated and discovered that Louise was fresh from Chicago where, according to her father, "she shot biscuits in a beanery and not caribou in Alaska." Then Louise told all; she did not want to hoodwink anyone; she had really been in Alaska with a friend she met in Chicago. But why spoil her fun when for the first time in her life, everybody was fussing over her? . . . I wonder if Louise ever went back to the Eskimo sleighs.

Old-timers tell me they had press agents with imagination in those days. Like a Captain J. F. J. Archibald who functioned for what was at the time, one of the largest hotels. According to a bulletin from Archibald, one of the girders used in erecting the building was so delicately balanced in the maze of ironwork, that when a flock of pigeons alighted upon it, it took twelve workmen three hours to replace it!

WAR AND politics serve for maintenance of the people, but war is the highest expression of the national will for survival. Therefore, politics must serve and war command.

Familiar Ring

IN MARK TWAIN'S "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" there are certain comments of the central character, Sir Boss, that have a rather familiar ring in these days of political worry over concentrated wealth and corporate power:

"And now here I was, in a country where a right to say how the country should be governed was restricted to six persons in each thousand of its population.

"For the 994 to express dissatisfaction with the reignant system and propose to change it would have made the whole six shudder as one man, it would have been so disloyal, so dishonorable, such putrid black treason.

So to speak, I was become a stockholder in a corporation where 994 of the members furnished all the money and did all the work, and the other six elected themselves a permanent board of direction and took all the dividends.

"It seemed to me that what the 994 dupes needed was a new deal."

Drama Critics' Circle

WHEN SEVENTEEN New York dramatic critics, including George Jean Nathan, get together socially in a clubroom, Broadway says her prayers. Well, seventeen of the men who with the twist of a pen, may make or break New York's shows, got together in a corner of the Algonquin last week, swapped yarns and organized the Drama Critics' Circle in the interests of good fellowship. Also to award a medal to the play they decide is the best of the year. The Rialto understands this to be direct opposition to the annual Pulitzer Prize, and the reviewers have not agreed much with the Pulitzer play decisions, lately.

Uncle Wiggily

By HOWARD R. GARIS

Once upon a time there was a queer animal called a Nab. The reason he was called that was because he was always trying to nab, or catch, other animals smaller than himself. The Nab was about as large as a dog and he had a very long nose. That's how he got his second name, Nosey.

But really his second name became his first name and his first name became the second, so he came to be called Nosey Nab.

"And some day," said Nosey Nab, "I'm going to be just like my name and nab Uncle Wiggily."

"Pooh! Nonsense! Fudge! You can't!" laughed the Bob Cat, whose silly little tail was as short as the Nab's nose was long. "You'll never catch that rabbit. I've tried and the Wolf has tried and the Fox has tried, but none of us can catch him, or nab him, as you call it."

"I'll do it," boasted Nosey Nab. "If I knew where Uncle Wiggily was I'd go catch him now."

BUMPED OUT OF BUNGALOW

"I can tell you where he is," said the Fox, limping up just then, for he had just bumped out of the bunny's bungalow on a cake of soap. "Uncle Wiggily just had a bath and I heard him say he was coming to these woods to look for an adventure. But he can look for all of me. I'm too sore to bother with him."

"I'm not going to try to catch him," said the Wolf. "He's too smart and clever for me."

"Then I'll do it," said Nosey Nab.

Off through the woods he started, just as Uncle Wiggily was coming away from the spring with the frozen fish in a can of water.

"What kind of a fish are you?" asked the rabbit gentleman as he hopped carefully along so he wouldn't spill the water out of the can, as I told you in the story before this. "You aren't a goldfish, are you?"

"No, I'm a catfish," was the answer.

"Oh, now you're fooling me," laughed the bunny.

"No, really I'm not," answered the fish. "My name is really catfish. I don't exactly mew like a cat, but I have whiskers on the side of my face and all cats have whiskers, you know. I suppose that's how I got my name."

Uncle Wiggily looked, and, surely enough, he saw some long, slender things like a cat's whiskers on each side of the mouth of the fish. But the whiskers were black, not white, and the fish, twiddling them, said to the bunny:

NOSEY NAB APPEARS

"Don't touch my whiskers, for they are sharp, like thorns, and can stick you. I wouldn't want that to happen after you have been so kind to me." Uncle Wiggily promised he wouldn't touch the prickery whiskers of the catfish that he was taking home to keep in his warm bungalow all winter. And, all of a sudden, out of the bushes popped Nosey Nab.

"Ho! Ho!" cried Nosey Nab. "They said I couldn't catch you, but I have, Uncle Wiggily. What have you in the can?"

"A catfish," answered the bunny, truthfully enough.

"Don't spoof me!" sneered Nosey Nab. "There isn't any such thing as a catfish, Let me look." He bent close to the can of water. Just then the fish popped his head out and with his whiskery horns he gave Nab such a dig on his nose that the Bad Chap loudly howled and ran away.

"Ha! Ha!" laughed Uncle Wiggily. "Good for you, Catfish!" Then he took the fish home. And when, later, the Bob Cat, the Fox and the Wolf met Nosey Nab and asked him why he had not caught the bunny, Nab never said a word. He couldn't. His nose was too sore.

Now, if the jumping rope will please stand still long enough for the soap to hang some clothes on it, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily's basket.

THIS CURIOUS WORLD By William Ferguson

When local authorities at the cemetery near Gettysburg, Pa., placed the above sign near the entrance gate, little did they dream of the destruction that would be wrought by firearms on that very spot. On July 1-3, 1863, the most important battle of the Civil War was fought there, with enormous loss of life.

Building a Pipe Organ

Tin Cans, Mousetraps and Old Fruit Crates Used By Young Builder to Construct Fine Instrument.

Making a pipe organ from cans, mousetraps, and fruit crates may sound purely fantastic; but it was a real adventure for twenty-one-year-old Charles McManis of Kansas City, Kan., who recently completed, to the amazement of even his most confident friends, a two-manual instrument, at an expenditure of $75.

Installed in the finished attic of the McManis home, it is an attractive organ of good tone quality, and has been acclaimed by musical authorities who have inspected the instrument as an unusual accomplishment.

"I used five dozen tin cans," said young McManis in describing the construction of the organ to a group of students and teachers who visited the home recently, "the kind with paper wrappers that could be taken off easily. I took a long time to flatten them, cut them, and shape them into pipes."

The entire organ, which has been built into the west wall of the attic, occupies a floor space ten feet in length, four feet in width, and is five feet tall at its highest point. It has three ranks of pipes, one wood set and two metal sets; and another wood rank is now under construction by the youthful builder. Thirty-seven metal pipes and sixty-one wood pipes make up the set.

"Why the mousetraps?" an interested visitor queried.

"Oh, they're to hold the pedals up," he said.

Young McManis, whose father and mother are both accomplished musicians, was eager to enlighten the inquirer, a Kansas City music teacher.

"The grease guns you see back of them work the expression shutters; there are four in all, two of each set," he said.

Interest in an old reed organ, used years ago in the church which he and his parents attend, gave him his first incentive to create a musical instrument, the young organ-maker said. The failure of a pipe in the new organ of that same church one Sunday morning six years ago brought his interest to a climax. Crawling into the organ chamber during the service, he removed the six-inch wooden pipe, took it to the basement of his home, repaired it, took all its measurements, and began making a set of his own.

From that point on, it was a fascinating game, which he enjoys telling about. The pride of the creator, the joy of the experimenter dominated him. Having a fund of originality but not a great deal of money to spend on the project, McManis made the organ a veritable storehouse of ingenious devices.

"For instance," he explained, "I wanted a tremolo attachment on my organ which, instead of vibrating at one speed, would oscillate at any desired frequency. Knowing the principle on which most tremolo devices operate, I experimented, until I obtained the result I wanted. That stop knob beside the lower manual, when pulled out or pushed in, changes the speed of the tremolo."

Since he took his first piano lesson when he was seven years old, musical instruments have held an unusual attraction for McManis. He had his first organ instruction when he was fifteen years of age and continued his study for a year and a half. At present he is enrolled in the Fine Arts school of the University of Kansas, working toward a degree of bachelor of music in organ under the guidance of Professor Laurel Everette Anderson.

WOLVES

Photographs by George M. Warren.

These pictures are believed to be the first ever taken of captured wolves on Vancouver Island. Mr. "Cougar" Smith, the famous hunter up near Campbell River, caught them as cubs and raised them. In the top picture they are fighting over a deer's head and in the lower right picture one of them is shown in a playful mood. Lower left, shows Mr. Smith handling one of the cubs. The male wolves grow to be 125 pounds and the female about seventy pounds. They each weighed about sixty-five pounds when these pictures were taken.

THE TINYMITES

Story by HAL COCHRAN — Pictures by GEORGE SCARBO

Wee Duncy shouted, "Sure I'll smile, and I will stay here for a while. I guess you are a friendly sort, so I feel welcome here.

"I'm just a Tinymite, you see, as full of pep as I can be. There are a lot of other Tinies roaming somewhere near.

"This big grasshopper took me for a ride. Gee, you should see him soar up through the air with every leap. I finally wore him out.

"Then I lugged him across the ground until this pleasant spot was found. Imagine how surprised we were, when first we heard you shout."

"Perhaps I scared you. That was mean, but when you walked on the scene, I, too, was quite a bit surprised," the little elf replied.

"Where are the other Tinies, now? Please try and get them here, somehow." "I wish I could, but I am lost from them," wee Duncy sighed.

"What, lost? Well, don't you worry, son," the elf snapped. "It will be real fun to fix you up a carriage, in which you can search around.

"Although the going may be rough, I'm sure, if you search far enough, your worries will be over, 'cause the Tinies will be found.

"Now, first of all, the carriage will be brought forth, and you'll get a thrill." The wee elf clapped his hands and very soon exclaimed, "Look there!"

Then Duncy shouted, in delight, "An acorn carriage. What a sight! An ant is hitched up to the front of it, I do declare."

"All right, hop in. The thing is strong. Take your grasshopper friend along," the elf said. "Then I'll say goodbye, 'cause here I'll have to stay."

Wee Duncy did as he was told, and of the reins he grabbed a hold. In just about a moment, he was on his merry way.

Willie Winkle

Say, everybody, I've got a big scoop this week. I don't mean those kinds of scoops they use in filling bags with sugar or flour, but what the newspapermen say when they get a story the other paper doesn't get.

My friend George M. Warren, who goes around town showing moving pictures and telling stories and is a real swell fellow, came over to my place and started telling me about Mr. "Cougar" Smith and about a couple of wolf cubs he captured. George went up to Mr. Smith's place and photographed the wolves and you can see them on this page in the adjoining columns. George is becoming a great photographer, and he loves animals.

So I asked George to write a story about the wolves, and George is so good hearted he said sure right away, and in a couple of days he brought over the story. So here it is, and I'm going to let you see it.

* * * *

Mr. Cecil "Cougar" Smith has lived in the Comox Valley for forty-eight years, and is employed by the Provincial Game Department as a predatory animal hunter. He was nicknamed "Cougar" due to the large number of cougars he has killed—over 500 in all. The purpose of my visit was to photograph two timber wolves which he had captured and had held in his possession four months.

I must admit my first impression was slightly disappointing. I had expected to see two vicious animals behind strong iron bars. Instead I saw a two-by-four chicken coop within which there were two peaceful-looking animals pacing up and down demanding attention. They were the exact image of the Alsatian police dog which I owned several years back.

So as to make it convenient to take photographs, the wolves were placed in a large chicken run; the chickens having been gathered and placed in an adjoining run along side. "Cougar" Smith carried the wolves to the run. The male, named Gerry, after Gerry McGeer, was very friendly, and there was no difficulty in handling him, but the female, named "Baby," was quite snappy and had to be handled with leather gloves.

"Gerry" and "Baby" were quite pleased with their new surroundings. One minute they chased each other, the next chasing Mr. Smith's pet dog, a small black spaniel who was on the best of terms with the wolves.

Every so often one or two of the numerous chickens in the adjoining run would venture too near to the boundary wire fence. The wolves would dart for the fence and the chickens would fly off in all directions.

After the dog was taken out of the pen "Cougar" Smith procured the head of a deer, which he had shot a few days previous, and threw it to the wolves. They suddenly changed from peaceful- playful animals into vicious timber wolves. They rushed for the deer's head. The female, the first there, picked it up and darted off. The male, snarling, hard after her, managed to grab a hold with his powerful teeth. They paused for about a minute. Their hair was bristling on end, their fangs showed, and they snarled. The female suddenly lost her hold and made a dart at her brother's throat. They fought madly for two minutes and then "Gerry" retired.

* * * *

"Cougar" Smith told me how he captured the two wolves:

Last winter a report came to him that a pack of twelve timber wolves was near the headwaters of the Brown River and Dowes Creek in the Forbidden Plateau.

In the early spring the pack broke up and spread throughout the district as far north as the Oyster River, making various kills of deer. Mr. Smith started out on their trail, killing several and spreading poison bait.

On June 9 "Cougar" Smith was hot on the trail of a cougar. As he was nearing Wolf Lake he came across a deer carcass killed by the cougar. On examination he noticed that a section of the leg had been dragged a distance of a hundred feet up the rise, which was not the act of a cougar. His dogs seemed agitated about something.

He urged his dogs on the trail. A short distance on he came to a large rotten tree which was still standing. He noticed at the bottom a fair-sized hole where a lot of the old wood had been scattered away, as if some dog had been scratching around. He left his rifle standing against the tree and tied his spaniel to his pack. His hound he left to go where it pleased, knowing that it could take care of itself; and hoping that it might come across some scent of the cougar. Mr. Smith bent down to examine the ground around the root of the tree and came across a tuft of hair. He was on the point of taking this when he heard the hound, about a hundred yards up the rise, give a yelp. He grabbed is gun and figured that a wolf was nearby. He saw something darting in the brush. He raised his rifle and took a quick shot and killed the wolf. It proved to be a female, the mother of a litter of cubs. He returned to the old tree, poked around in the hole and found four wolf cubs, which he took to his home.

Mr. Smith kept the four cubs for a week. Two were shipped on July 1 to Seattle and placed in Woodland Park and the other two were kept till October 17, when they were shipped and reunited with the others at Woodland Park.

At their capture the cubs were only a few weeks old. They were given a pan of milk, which they refused at first. As soon as their noses had been doused in the milk they drank it up by the panfuls. The first month they were fed strictly on milk, and took all the milk that Mr. Smith's Jersey cow gave—three gallons a day. After the first month Mr. Smith fed them hunks of raw veal along with the kitchen scraps.

COULDN'T SWALLOW IT

A little girl went to a party and ate herself to a standstill. She realized this, but an elderly benevolent gentleman did not, and tried to incite her to further gastronomic feast. Tempting her with a dish of pastries, he asked: "Won't you have another cake?"

She eyed the dish sadly as she replied:

"I could chew it, but I couldn't swallow it."

Soldier of the Next War Won't Be the Pack Horse He Was in 1918

By STANLEY A. TULLSEN

THE OVERLOADED soldier who rivaled a pack horse in the equipment he carried in World War days is being made a changed person—much to his relief. A great part of the burden that infantrymen bore on their backs in 1918 now is hauled in trucks and the foot soldier has been given mobility never before known in warfare.

The pictures strikingly show the transformation. The veteran sergeant at the left carries the burden which recruits of 1917 well remember—full pack, extra shoes, slicker, heavily loaded bandoleers, etc. The soldier of the next war, at the right, offers a trim contrast, with his smaller pack and neater uniform.

The great advance for the infantry has been in method of transport. Where foot soldiers once tramped over roads at three miles an hour, in the "next" war they will be rushed swiftly to the front in speedy trucks, some countries using midget vehicles that carry only two to four soldiers. The army chiefs incline to the view that light trucks, bearing ten to twenty men, are more practicable.

Dishwashing Status Raised With Science Calling In Chlorine To War On Germs

YOU MAY escape bullets and income taxes and a few other things, but you can't get away from the 50,000 bacteria—sometimes it adds up to 100,000—that, say laboratory scientists, infest your coffee spoon, whether it's an heirloom or plated one.

The United States Government, weary for a moment of wars and drums and stocks and taxes, has turned its mind to dishwashing, that well-established custom of swirling a plate through a pan of soapy water. The Bureau of Preventable Diseases of the Department of Health, at Washington, has discovered that the home remedy is not enough.

James G. Cumming, M.D., chief of this bureau, deserves the gratitude of the eating public for discovering that the washing and rinsing of dishes and silver can be turned to account in the war against bacteria.

EXPERIMENT STILL UNFINISHED

AN EXPERIMENT was conducted in forty-six restaurants. An average of from 50,000 to 100,000 bacteria clung to each spoon after ordinary washing rites was completed. Chlorine then was added to the dishwater. From two to no germs remained. The kind of chlorine and its technical application must be further perfected by the department, but when the knowledge is ready for dissemination, pneumonia, scarlet fever, measles, tuberculosis and respiratory troubles should be immeasurably decreased.

We would like to congratulate the Department of Preventable Diseases for its simple, direct method of going to the dishpan as the root of a lot of contagion. The eating menace stays with us, whether the war in Ethiopia goes to a great-grandson of the Queen of Sheba or an Italian Premier who has read about the things that Caesar did in Gaul. The danger from contagion in eating places—at home and in public—has remained static through the years whether or not Wall Street crashed or Congress voted inheritance taxes.

MAKING KITCHEN TASKS ADVENTUROUS

EVERYONE of us has been warned many times to be careful where we ate; to avoid those places where cups and glasses were merely dipped in water. Everyone of us has forgotten, time after time, the thousand thousand dangers to which human flesh is subjected. To have the matter taken out of our hands is a real service.

The dishwashing boredom should let up, too. It is a semi-purification rite that few women have escaped. The crumbs are hardly brushed away and the cups and saucers deposited in the cupboard, as most of us know, when it is time for another orgy. Now there will be some sense to it all. You will know, as you put your hands in the foamy suds, that you are going to battle, and the victory is yours. Millions of germs are succumbing.

There is a game that small girls play with dishes. Knives are knights and forks are princesses and spoons are dwarfs and pages. The dishes, depending on their sizes, become castles and cottages. There is a magic in the make-believe that makes the process hasten. Anyway, I used to find it helpful during the time-out period from croquet or a neighborhood game of tag or hide-and-seek. The misery of grown-ups, who had to wash dishes and were so old they couldn't use their imaginations with dignity, was a child-puzzle.

Now it is acived. Making war on germs is much more diverting than going romantic about oatmeal bowls and orange juice glasses.

Seriously speaking, the recent discovery of the health investigators is a worthy scientific project that should be classed with other findings that appear on the roll of research honors.

Have Good Rain Drainage To Protect Your Walls

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

SOME FRIENDS of mine, who are altering their house on a thin budget, found that there was not enough money for gutters and leaders, as well as for an awning for a terrace.

Talking it over, it seemed to them that gutters and leaders would be a waste of money. They remembered hearing people talk of bills for repainting and for rusted pipe, and that a friend had had trouble when ice formed and tore the gutters loose.

I agreed that the awning would be a great addition, but said that, for the good of the house, the proper disposal of rainfall would be a better investment.

CAN WORK THROUGH CRACKS

A great quantity of water falls on a roof in a heavy rain; if not taken care of, it runs down the walls. Water does more harm to a house than any other one thing. Blown by a wind, it works through cracks seemingly too small to be worth considering, and, in addition to staining the inside walls and decorations, may do damage to the frame and other parts.

Considering these possibilities, I feel that gutters and leaders are necessities for protection as well as for appearances.

For satisfaction, design and material should be correct. The metal should be of a kind that will not corrode, for otherwise there must be continual repainting to keep it in condition.

To carry water from all but rare and exceptionally heavy storms, the leaders should have one square inch of area for every 150 square feet of surface drained, and the gutters should be in proportion.

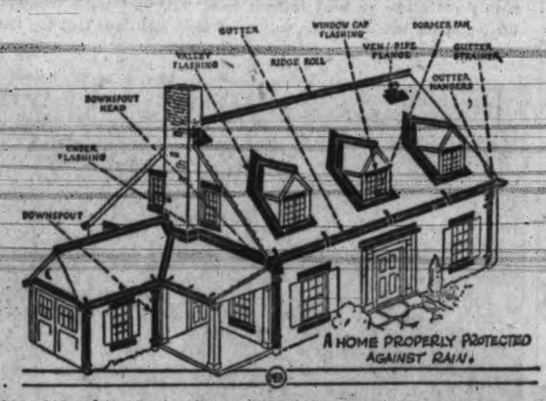
PREPARE FOR ICE

Gutters should be so placed that, when clogged by ice, water will overflow rather than back up under the roofing. Supports should be strong enough to hold the added weight of ice.

Sections of gutter should be put together with joints that slip with expansion and contraction; if solid, they will break with changes in temperature. Leaders should be protected against clogging by dead leaves with strainers of the same metal at the openings; if of a different metal, there will be corrosion.

When the discharge from the leaders cannot be to a sewer or down hill, a dry well should be provided. For long service, a dry well should be a hole of ample size, lined with brick, stone or concrete blocks laid up without mortar, so that water can soak into the ground all around, as well as through the bare earth bottom.

The sides can be brought together at the top to form a bottle-shaped affair, to be covered with a slab of reinforced concrete and topped with a foot or so of soil. A dry well should be at least ten feet from the house to prevent water from working back to the foundations and cellar.



A HOME PROPERLY PROTECTED AGAINST RAIN.

Golden Plover Migration Natural History Miracle

WILLIAM ATHERTON DUPUY has been telling correspondents about the annual flights of the golden plover from Hawaii to the Arctic Circle.

This is a 3,000-mile non-stop trip which is made in about thirty-six hours. Each bird travels alone, without compass and remains for three months up beyond Alaska to raise its young.

The newly-born plovers, as soon as their wings are strong enough, hop right off for Hawaii. They plunge straight out into the middle of the Pacific and apparently never miss the tiny islands.

A theory of natural historians is that the birds have been doing this for thirty or forty million years—or ever since the Arctic was tropical—just from force of habit.

Stars have been found that are from 5,000 to 10,000 times as bright as our sun.

Air-conditioner For Single Rooms

THE AIR CONDITIONING department of the General Electric Company has announced the development of the first self-contained room-cooling unit which operates on an ordinary 110 volt a.c. circuit, and requires neither special power line nor water supply or drain pipe connections. It operates by a simple adjustment of its ducts to a window and plugging into the nearest electric wall socket.

Designed for such applications as office or board rooms, hotel room, or home living, dining and bedrooms the new conditioner cools, dehumidifies, cleans, and circulates 275 cubic feet of air per minute, and has a cooling capacity nearly equivalent to the melting of a half-ton of ice per day.

New Mercury Vapor Street Lights Used

BROOKLYN'S busy Albee Square, where Fulton Street crosses De-Kalb Avenue, is now lighted with eight General Electric high-intensity mercury-vapor luminaires, the first of their kind to be used within the area of Greater New York.

The Downtown Brooklyn Association Inc., with the permission of the city, decided to furnish a sample of what modern lighting might do for the business section. It chose Albee Square as the site for this experiment and mercury-vapor lamps as the source of illumination, as both seemed ideally suited to this purpose.

The light from the mercury lamp is greenish-blue in color but, in these luminares, it is combined with the light from an incandescent lamp which corrects the color to a large extent. Seen in the combined light of the two lamps, colors retain their normal appearance with sufficient closeness for this type of service.

These lights are not as large as the sodium-vapor lamps used for highway lighting. Although the sodium lamp is more efficient than the mercury-vapor type, the light from the mercury lamp is more easily corrected for adequate color rendition. Therefore the mercury lamp is better suited for most city street lighting.

In installing mercury-vapor lighting, the Brooklyn Downtown Association believed that managers of the large Albee Square stores would be quick to criticise or praise a new street-lighting system. And, aside from the hundreds of thousands of people who pass through this locality daily, it would be possible to learn the popular reaction.

The association was right. Department store-owners were much in favor of the new lighting and concluded that direct benefits would accrue to them as a result. The distinctive lighting set off window displays to advantage, and window shoppers of the night time became store shoppers the next day.

Persons entering the lighted area usually inquire about the lighting and stop to look over the equipment.

Bio-Chemical Diagnosis Shows Meningitis Sooner

A NEW DIAGNOSIS for the non-epidemic type of meningitis, enabling detection of the disease from one to five days earlier than heretofore, has been reported by Dr. Samuel J. Kopetzky of New York. The method was developed at Beth Israel Hospital, New York, under the direction of Dr. Kopetzky and Dr. Ella Fishberg.

Of the two types of meningitis, one is epidemic and the other follows an infection of the ear or the mastoid in many cases. The new diagnosis applies only to the latter type.

There had been no way of telling in advance whether an infection in the ear or mastoid would develop into meningitis and physicians had had to wait until the bacteria appeared to determine the presence of the disease. The new method determines sooner whether meningitis is pending.

Meningitis has two symptoms, it was explained, internal cranial pressure and toxicity. It had been thought that the toxicity was due to the bacteria.

The Beth Israel researches, however, traced the toxicity to the waste product of the cells themselves, which are ordinarily thrown off in the healthy body but which accumulate because the meningitis bacteria prevent the body from throwing them off.

CHEMICAL TEST OF SPINAL FLUID

Meningitis, it was explained, first produced "stasis of the circulation" of the cerebro-spinal fluid, and this starts the intercranial pressure and the consequent failure to remove the poisons. The pressure comes from the capillaries trying to wash out the waste products from the brain.

Instead of waiting for the presence of bacteria, the new method consists of taking a series of biochemical tests, which have been found to give definite indications that the disease is impending, Dr. Kopetzky reported.

The chemical indications were given as an increase in the lactic acid and cholin content of the cerebro-spinal fluid and a decrease in the chlorides, carbonates and acid-alkali balance of the fluid.

The new diagnosis, Dr. Kopetzky added, justified the expectation for increasing the number of cures and the saving of many lives.

Farm and Garden

Plant Tulips Deep And Escape "Fire"

By QUERCUS ALBA

MANY GARDENERS are concerned about the tulip disease which has appeared over here within the last few years. The tulip is prone to one serious disease known as tulip fire. The symptoms are the production of lesions on the foliage. If numerous, they may run together and produce entire collapse of certain parts of the leaf.

The reddening caused has made the disease known by the name of "fire." Lesions are produced on the flowers, which growers attribute to the action of adverse weather conditions. In bad cases the flowers are entirely spoiled. When the disease is bad, the main stem is attacked and the whole plant collapses before the flowers open.

The fungus which is represented by the resting bodies, dark or black in color, may be found in all infected tulips toward the base of the old flower stalk, inside the outer scale leaves, or between the bulbs which may have formed from the parent tulip. The disease is spread one of two ways: either by planting clean bulbs in contaminated soil—that is, the soil containing the resting bodies produced from a previously diseased crop—or, planting infected bulbs in clean soil. Under both these circumstances, infection of certain of the bulbs is bound to occur, and, furthermore, once a diseased shoot gets above ground level, the spread of the disease is easy. The short-lived spores ripen and are carried by the wind on to the healthy plants. Tulips can be grown in the same site for several years, but the resting bodies of tulip fire accumulate each year and in the end bulbs cannot be grown on the same area.

LIFTING

Tulips should be lifted at least every second year and the bulbs thoroughly cleaned off and planted back into a fresh site. When lifted, the whole of the debris surrounding each plant can be removed and with this debris most of the resting bodies are removed. The old flower stalks must be remover right to their base. The one brown scale protecting the bulb should then be carefully examined and if resting bodies are found to be present, this brown scale can with safety be removed, especially if it be not done until just before the planting takes place.

Tulip "fire" attacks no other plant but tulips. Therefore it is perfectly safe to alternate tulips with narcissi in the same bed.

It is safe to lift tulips three weeks after plants have finished flowering, although at the time the foliage may still be green. At this stage, if the tulips are carefully lifted and dried off, they will make good growth the following year. The plan of drying tulips off in the sun is erroneous, because tulips burn badly and develop the trouble known as "chalkiness." The correct place to dry tulips is either under a north wall or in an airy shed.

Data received from our Experimental Station at Sidney recommends the deep planting of tulip bulbs. Evidently by so doing the fungus is then drowned. Nine inches is the depth advised. This can hardly be done with a hand-trowel. It means planting the bulb nearly the length of an ordinary twelve-inch trowel. This seems a simple and easy way to eradicate "fire," and, if so, we should by all means follow the advice.

NECESSITY FOR CARE

We would like to emphasize the necessity for unending care towards the checking of any disease connected with bulbs. Commercial growers do all in their power to grow and send out clean stock. On a large scale, disinfected plants are used, but when it comes to the private garden especially where Oriental help is used, bulbs are planted year in and year out regardless of what condition they may happen to be in.

In many gardens where such help is used, everything is left entirely in the hands of the "garden man," and then one wonders why tulips and narcissi deteriorate year after year. What does the average Oriental, or even white, gardener know about diseases such as tulip fire or narcissi fly? The latter is far more dangerous than the former, as there is every chance of it spreading into other bulbs, such as our native camass or erythroniums. Prevention is the safest cure.

From Scotland Wheat Came To Canada To Battle Against Fate

By E. M. STRAIGHT
Superintendent Experimental Station
Saanichton

THE CHINESE cultivated wheat 3,000 years before Christ. The most ancient languages mention it, yet the beginnings of the wheat industry are wrapped in mythology.

The coming of wheat to Canada; its struggle for existence and what it means to Canada to-day are stories well known and full of interest to the Canadian people. Here neither myth nor legend has to be considered, for while the growing of vegetables was carried on by the agents of the Hudson's Bay Company soon after the arrival of the company, the growing of wheat began with the Selkirk Settlers, who arrived from Scotland via Hudson Bay and York Factory in August, 1812.

On the arrival of these settlers they immediately set about the preparation of small plots of ground for the sowing of small plots of ground for the sowing of the winter wheat they had brought with them. Only spades and hoes were available for the purpose, yet with these the work was done, and the seeding accomplished. Likewise, the balance of the prepared land was seeded the following spring. Both crops were a total failure.

From 1814 to 1824 it seemed as if wheat in Canada was pursued by an evil fate for the birds devoured what the Northwest Company had not trampled under foot. Many of the settlers left and did not return. John McLeod and three companions seem to have been the only ones who remained. Even with all the difficulties they had encountered some harvest was reaped from the partial recovery of parts of the trampled grain.

SEMPLE COLONY

Governor Semple, sent out from Scotland, arrived about this time with 120 persons. After setting aside forty bushels of wheat for seed he was able to allow two pounds of grain per day for each person, and thus they came through the winter of 1815-1816. The crop made good growth during the spring of 1916 until the Northwest Company again made its appearance followed by the massacre of "Seven Oaks" and again no harvest was reaped.

Early in 1817 Lord Selkirk sent a force from Fort William, recaptured Fort Douglas and the remnants of the Semple colony returned. Just where the seed came from we do not know, but a small quantity of wheat was seeded. Though the yield was good, there was a great danger of famine unless other food could be secured. The story of that winter, the hunting of buffalo, the unspeakable hardships endured cannot be dealt with in a word.

These Scottish settlers, however, struggled back to the colony and then seeded the remaining grain that had been stored for the purpose, and at great sacrifice. In early season the crop looked healthy and vigorous, but later grasshoppers like a plague devoured every green thing. A few ears of half-ripe grain were gleaned by the women.

GRASSHOPPERS

The winter following was quite as bad as the worst, but again ground was prepared and the little seed store planted and again devoured by grasshoppers. This time not a seed was left.

The next seed we hear of came from Wisconsin. After a three-months' journey on snowshoes, delegates sent by the colony reached Prairie du Chien, secured 250 bushels of seed, loaded it on flat boats, and by way of the Mississippi, Big Stone Lake and Red River, landed it at the colony in June, 1820. It was sown at once and partly matured. From that date on for forty-eight years, seed was abundant.

Subsequent history shows plagues of mice, floods, frosts and practically everything that the western farmer has ever endured, but by 1849 the census showed 6,000 acres under cultivation and 492 ploughs and 576 harrows owned by the colonists. And so wheat came to the prairies.

Chaff As Good Food As Wheat

Modern medicine appears to have put a crimp in that fine old adage that we should separate the wheat from the chaff and discard the latter as useless or nearly so.

According to a paper presented to the San Francisco section of the American Chemical Society recently, wheat may be very necessary in sustaining human life, but wheat chaff, straw and the like have now become very important factors in preserving human life.

Care Of Goats Same As Cows

In view of the increasing popularity of goat keeping in Canada, it is observed that goats require approximately the same care as dairy cows. Goats should be housed in wet, cold weather, and during the fall months they should be brought into the goat barn at night.

As the weather becomes colder they will be more and more confined, until finally in the winter months their only outing will be once a day for exercise. Clover or alfalfa hay is the best all-round roughage and the goats should be fed twice daily on as much as they will eat up readily.

Cabbages or roots in the form of turnips or mangels are also relished and may be given regularly. Oats should constitute the main grain, fed twice daily, morning and evening. Five to ten per cent of oilcake or 25 per cent bran may be added to the oats. Goats vary in their capacity for grain, so that each goat should be given what seems to be the necessary amount to produce the greatest flow of milk.

Barnevelder Hen Product of Many Crosses

By P. J. WIJK and P. UBBELS
Of Holland

REGARDING the descent of this breed, little is known with certainty. About eighty years ago, in the neighborhood of the village of Barneveld (Gelderland Province), the fowls which were kept in the ordinary way were, as regards color, of a very diversified nature among themselves and could not be classified as belonging to any particular breed.

They were called simply "farmers' fowls." On a few farms, however, Cochins were kept. The brown eggs of these were very much in demand. The other poultry breeders therefore endeavored to obtain breeding cocks of this breed.

The crossed Cochins were in 1885 mated with Brahmas and a few years later, more often, with Langshans. The type of the latter breed can still easily be traced in the present Barnevelder: the coffee-brown egg will also, no doubt, be mainly due to the Langshans, although the egg of the present Barnevelder is larger.

In 1899 it was ascertained that the fowls on the farms in the neighborhood of Barneveld showed some uniformity. This could be explained by the fact that the poultry keepers always obtained their setting eggs from the farmers who came to market with the finest eggs, and who as a rule used dark-colored cocks for breeding.

In 1906 these birds were once more crossed with Buff Orpingtons, in consequence of which they became a little more partridge-colored.

From 1910 efforts were made to obtain more uniformity in color and type, and from this time dates the name Barnevelder. The national organization of poultry breeders then existing, the "V.P.N.," has done much for the improvement of this breed. As a result of the introduction of the trap nest and the work of specialist breeders, rapid advances were made. In 1921 an association of Barneveld breeders was established and the standard was fixed, which still holds good at present. Since that time the breed has made great progress and may now be classed among the best utility breeds.

The color of the feathers shows some similarity to that of the Indian gamecock, although this breed has not been used in the creation of the Barnevelder. The Barnevelder cocks, however, have a seamed neck. In breeding regard is paid in the first place to a large number of large brown eggs, and only in the second place to the color of the feathers. By its build the Barnevelder belongs to the so-called medium heavy breeds.

Store Potatoes But Remember They Breathe

IN THE storage of potatoes it has always to be remembered that the potato is a living organism and that there are two periods when respiration may become of practical importance. One of these is immediately after digging, and the other a period of several days following a sudden rise in storage temperature.

To prevent sweating, special attention should be given to the ventilation of potatoes handled in bulk immediately after digging, and also after sudden rises in temperature following a period of steady cool storage. The lower the storage temperature, the higher will be the initial rate of respiration at a sudden higher temperature. Sudden rises and falls in storage temperatures are to be avoided always.

The early fall is the time to provide all possible air circulation by keeping ventilators and doors open until there is danger of freezing. On warm days doors should be closed and opened only at night when the air is cooled. The amount of ventilation required is that which will keep the potatoes dry. From early December onwards all ventilators and doors should be closed and protected to prevent the potatoes from being frozen.

Colquitz Waterfall Beautiful and Useful

Nature seems to hide its gems on Vancouver Island, and, just out of view of the motorist, the camera has caught these glimpses of a sparkling waterfall.

A million gallons of water a day rushes over these rocks as the Colquitz River tumbles in gay cascades down a fifty-five foot drop between the properties of J. A. Grant, Provincial Markets Commissioner, and John Marsden on the West Saanich Road, just past Royal Oak.

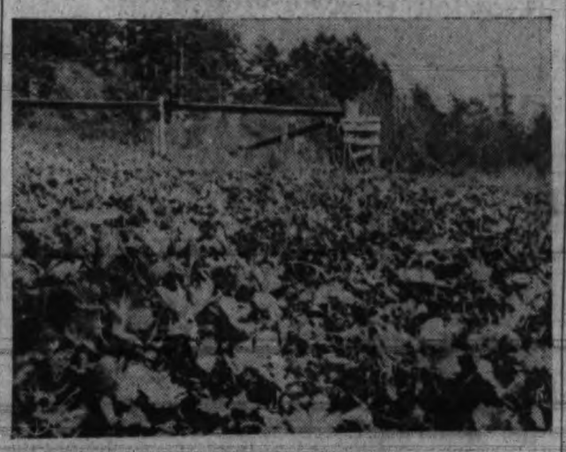
With a train of drops following and glistening in the sun, the water rushes swiftly down this sluice through the brushes and weeds of the waterfall to the fields and houses below.



And here it is, almost at its journey's end, carried high above the fields whose green and luscious growth is the result of its life-giving moisture.

All-year Cabin Ideal For Pigs

The winter care of pigs causes no anxiety to the farmer who has adopted the all-year-round cabin. These portable cabins are useful for 365 days in the yar and are efficient and economical. They are cool in summer and provide adequate shelter in the winter.

Built of rough lumber, with securely fastened sides and hinged sections, each cabin has room enough for four or five brood sows, and breeding stock of all ages will thrive in the semi-outdoor life. for the cabins on the advent of winter can be moved to fresh ground or to wherever convenient. Hogs fed in cabins will rarely become crippled, but for this class of stock an open shed with a low, straw-covered sleeping berth is better.

The average piggery is difficult to ventilate and therefore damp. Dampness, impure air, lack of exercise, and overfeeding make a combination that will soon discourage the hog-feeder and relieve him of his stock. Not so with the all-year hog cabin.

Ayrshire From Quebec Highest Fat Producer

AN AYRSHIRE COW, "Springburn Lovely Pet," in the Bois de La Poche farm herd of W. W. Skinner of Senneville, Que., who has just completed her eleventh consecutive milk record, now ranks as the highest butter fat producing Ayrshire cow in the world and as the second highest milk producing Ayrshire in the world, according to the Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association.

She already held the Canadian records for fat and milk with a total production of 142,272 pounds milk, 5,890 pounds fat in ten lactations. These records gave her the No. 1 meritorious gold seal certificate of the C.A.B.A. and also entitled her owner to membership in the American Ayrshire Hundred Thousand Pound Club.

Her latest record of 13,943 pounds milk, 562 pounds fat in 365 days now gives her production a total of 156,215 pounds milk, 6,542 pounds fat, 4.12 per cent in lactations, or 3,644 milking days. This works out at 62,486 quarts milk, or more than seventeen quarts each milking day

Australians To Challenge Wheat Kings of Canada

WESTERN CANADA'S wheat kings face competition from down under at this year's International Hay and Grain Show, to be run off in conjunction with the International Livestock Exposition which opens in Chicago November 30.

Seven Australian champions, all from New South Wales, have entered their wheat samples in a challenge to Canada's supremacy in wheat growing.

For the livestock show, the fat of the land, to the number of more than 12,000 selected head, is entered.

A highly flourishing condition in animal husbandry and a quick recovery from drought ravages of 1934 was the interpretation Show Manager B. H. Heide put on the large number of contestants for the eight-day exhibition. With the companion grain show, it reflects also a decided state of well being "down on the farm," he said.

Heide estimated at more than $3,000,000 the value of the great herd of blue ribbon seeking horses, cattle, swine and sheep which will compete for rich cash prizes totaling more than $100,000 in the livestock and the hay and grain show.

Vagrant Farms Of Nile Delta

Agriculture in the vast area of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan is carried on under a diversity of climates, peoples and usages, and it was in the Nile valley, some authorities state, that the first farmers of the world made their appearance in the ancient people known as the Badari.

However that may be, to-day the country south of Cairo is virtually rainless and would be utter desert save for the annual irrigation by the Nile flood.

Thereby hangs a quaint tale. When the flood declines, terraces and slopes of set new silt emerge. The high level borders which are covered only in years of extraordinary spate are called "gerfs," a similar term "gesiras" being applied to islands, sandbanks and sandy beaches. They are jealously prized assets of the river villages, for no cultivation is required in raising crops on them.

These gerfs and gesiras are under an ancient and intricate Mohammedan code which is somewhat different to Canadian rules and regulations. For example, if the falling flood one autumn reveals that a sandbank previously enjoyed by, say, village A, no longer exists, but that a new sandbank has made its appearance six or eight miles down stream, this new sandbank, although facing village B, is regarded as the truant property of village A, and not as a windfall for village B. The villagers of A thereupon trek daily to and from work on their distant vagrant property.

Is Brome-alfalfa Pasture Solution?

By "CERES"

ALFALFA and brome grass may be the pasture solution to Vancouver Island's grazing problems during the five dry months of summer.

Between May and September, seldom more than five inches of rain falls in Saanich out of a total annual precipitation of forty inches.

Pastures which are luscious and green in the early summer quickly become brown and dry. Cattle which should have nothing but a pasture menu during the sunny months have to be fed soiling crops or silage for succulent feed with added expense and trouble to dairymen.

Insufficient rain causes a problem which can only be solved by finding a pasture crop whose roots go down to a sufficient depth to tap the soil moisture.

Alfalfa is known to do well under dry conditions once it has got a start. Brome grass also sends its roots deep into the soil and is aided in its growth by alfalfa.

REDUCE COST

Henry Rive, dairy commissioner, believes that if a good pasture could be found that could stand the summer drought, it would be the biggest thing that could be done in cutting down the cost of production. He was enthusiastic over the prospects of alfalfa and brome, which he pointed out had been recommended by Kirk of the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa, and Jefferies of the Dominion Experimental Station, Saanichton.

Cecil Tice, field crop commissioner, however, pointed out that while brome and alfalfa were undoubtedly a good combination, permanent pastures were hardly suited to the agricultural set-up on Vancouver Island. Land on small farms was too precious to be set aside for pasture alone.

On the other hand many dairies were in the "large" farm class, and on these permanent pastures would be profitable.

GOOD TILTH NEEDED

For alfalfa, the soil had to be in very good tilth, Mr. Tice said. It should be well drained, and enriched with plenty of manure, and also limed.

The brome-alfalfa mixture recommended by Dr. Kirk was fifteen pounds of brome seeds to five pounds of alfalfa. Another permanent pasture mixture recommended by the Central Experimental Farm consists of eight pounds of perennial rye, eight pounds of orchard grass, two pounds of white clover and six pounds of timothy.

Spare Time Work On City Lot Produces Harvest of $600 a Year

By A.L.P.S.

HOW WOULD you like to make $600 a year in your spare time?"

This sounds like one of these easy-money advertisements, but it has nothing to do with painting postcards or sewing socks.

A Victoria gardener has done this, and all he had was a strong back, some seeds, and a city lot.

"I have taken over $4,000 worth of vegetables and flowers off one city lot in seven years," John Gibson, of Lillian Road, said when I interviewed him recently. "I bought the lot at an auction sale for $350 and I made enough on the first crop to pay for it."

It was a lady who offered him a quarter for a bunch of flowers that turned Mr. Gibson into a commercial spare-time grower.

"I had a pretty garden on Fairfield Road, and I used to give lots of flowers away," he said. "Then a lady wanted to buy 25 cents worth of flowers, and since then I haven't given any more flowers away."

THREE CITY LOTS

That was back in 1917. In 1920 Mr. Gibson moved to Lillian Road and bought the lot on the Richmond corner. He paid $600 for it but in three years he had made enough off it to pay back the sum plus interest and taxes.

Since then Mr. Gibson's commercial spare time growing has expanded. He now has three city lots and he rents another lot from the city for $2.50 a year.

"Anyone can get a lot from the city for that amount," Mr. Gibson said when I expressed my surprise at the low rental.

The spare lots in front and to the side of the Gibson home now look like a market garden. A greenhouse has been built and is operated by Mr. Gibson's son Gordon.

Of course, this gardener can make a lot more money out of his produce than most people, as he sells everything retail. Also, his $600 a year was made in pre-depression days. Still, Mr. Gibson says:

"I wouldn't be a bit scared to take a city lot for $300 and make the price in a year working on it in my spare time."

THREE THINGS FOR SUCCESS

Spare time to Mr. Gibson means from three o'clock in the morning in the summertime or whenever it is light in the winter to when he goes to work, and in the evening he is out in the garden till it is dark.

The success of his spare-time work depends on three things—cultivation, rotation and fertilization.

"People think they can grow things without work," he said. "I quite often dig my soil four times a year."

The soil when Mr. Gibson started would not grow potatoes, but he built it up with manure, and in the case of clayey soil, peat moss and sea sand. Beside commercial fertilizer, he uses eight to nine loads of manure every year.

He only manures once every two years. On the manured ground he generally grows early potatoes. These are harvested in the middle of June, and chrysanthemums are then set out. Part of the land is planted down to catch crops such as radishes or lettuces and then turned to bulbs in October.

PEAS AND POTATOES

In the second year he uses fertilizer and plants out gladioli or root crops. In the third year he goes back to potatoes and the rotation begins all over again.

He also plants out peas on the year he manures, but the manure is buried deep in trenches. After they are finished in June, the land is then turned over to daffodils. In the second year he sets out root crops of perennials.

Thus Mr. Gibson gets two to three crops a year off his land. He does not believe in letting perennials stay put. He moves his every two or three years, and when he does he cuts out and discards the centre.

Peas, early potatoes, and lettuce are the most profitable crops, according to this spare-time grower, while there is an unlimited demand for all types of flowers.

In the case of early potatoes he grows the Early St. George, while he recommends Laxton's Progress, Lincoln, and Meteor as good garden peas.

Garden Hints For This Week

The best ROSES are grown in soil that has been deeply dug and well enriched with plant food. Now is a good time to plant roses of all kinds.

* * *

HEATHER, RHODODENDRONS, KALMIAS and AZALEAS do best in light soil with the addition of a liberal supply of peat moss. Dwarf growing varities are very useful for the adornment of the rock garden.

* * *

INCARVILLIAS may be dug up and stored in sand until next spring. This is sometimes called the hardy gloxinia.

Do NOT plant diseased bulbs of any kind—better to burn them.

Frames in which VIOLETS have been planted should have the outsides banked with strawy manure. The glass may now be put on the frames.

* * *

Make new ROCKERIES and rebuild those that are not to your liking. Give retaining walls a slope of one inch backwards to the foot rise.

Time To Prune Trees On Wall

If worn out branches have been removed, it only remains now to rearrange the growths so as to cover the space available, and to shorten back the stubs left by summer pinching.

If well ripened and not too long, the leading shoots of plums and cherries should be left entire, as shortening only induces growth. However, where little growth has been made and further extension is desired, hard pruning or shortening back will attain the desired result.

Peaches should have the young wood laid in full length.

Nightly Cleansing Makes Rouge Safe

By ALICIA HART

DOES ROUGE enlarge the pores?

No, it does not, provided, of course, your face is cleansed thoroughly at least twice a day.

If, when you go to bed, you leave dust and layers of makeup on your skin, before long your pores will be enlarged and your complexion will look rough and unattractive. But you need not blame the bad condition on your rouge. Attribute it to your own negligence.

If you like cream rouge (it generally is the easiest to apply and it stays on longer than dry varieties), smooth it on before you powder. If you have difficulty in blending it, brush your forefinger lightly across a bit of cold cream before you dip it in the rouge.

When you have finished, wait about five minutes before you powder. This gives your natural color a chance to get back to normal (it gets higher as you rub and pat on rouge), allowing you to judge accurately whether or not you need more rouge. You simply can't put cream rouge on powdered skin.

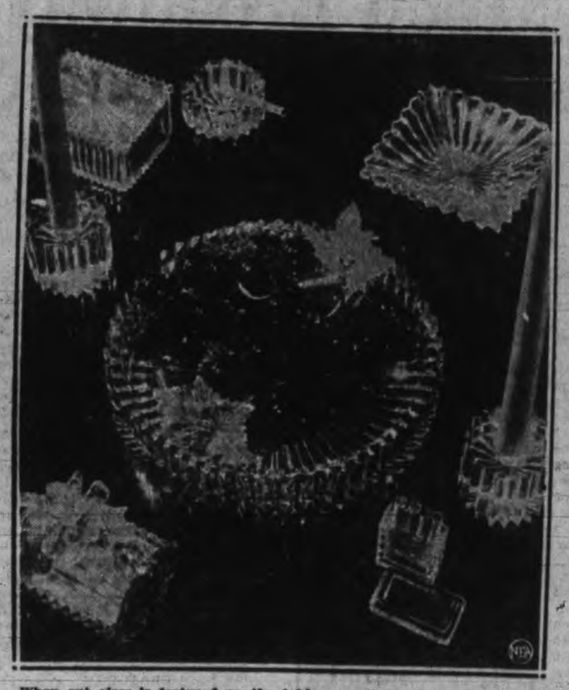
Be sure to choose a shade that matches your natural coloring and learn to apply it correctly. It should be kept well upward, following the cheek bones outward. Don't rouge chin, hollow in throat or your forehead. After all, you are trying to enhance your natural skin tones and to smear artificial color on spots where natural high color never appears defeats your purpose.

SMART TABLE IS GOOD MATCH

Clever Hostess Relates Not Only Color Scheme But Also Design of Napery and Dishes

Deep ivory tablecloth with matching napkins bordered in brown provide a harmonious setting for the ivory and brown china that is designed on spherical lines.



When cut glass is featured on the table, everything else must be kept simple. Such a setting provides a fine opportunity for showing off the fine wood of the table.

(From Hammacher-Schlemmer)

By MARY MARGARET McBRIDE

WHEN YOU set a table for company these days, it is not a simple matter of bringing out your best linen and glass and china. Not, that is, if you are a hostess who cares about distinction.

The time is gone forever when just any cloth, so long as it is fine damask or lace, will serve as background for your Sunday dishes. There is the question of color harmony to consider and the equally vital matter of matching designs.

Take, for example, the buffet table in the picture. The silvery cloth is woven of metallized cellulose film (incidentally, it is non-tarnishable) and the ramekins of a hammered pewter, as well as the drinking cups with pewter finish, carry out the color scheme. The modern centrepiece is made of sapphire blue cellophane straws for accent with grey balls reflected on a mirror plaque. Imagine that you replace your pewter-color cups by glass and see how a fine effect could be spoiled.

COLORS OF NEW CHINA ARE IMPERISHABLE

The cloth in the breakfast table scene is a deep ivory to serve as background for the ivory china and the napkins have a band of rich brown to match the three pencil lines of color on each piece. This new china design is based on the circle. The plate is the shallow segment of a circle, the cereal bowl is a deeper segment, the teacup is a half circle, and the teapot and sugar bowls are complete circles.

The color in this set strikes another of the new practical notes in china—it is completely unaffected by wear, water or acids.

If your china has more than one color in it, by the way, try picking out and intensifying the most striking by embodying the same in cloth or doilies. If you use pottery, have a cloth or mats of contrasting color—yellow pottery, maybe with a blue cloth, or green pottery with yellow doilies.

If there are candles, let them be the same color as the cloth. As for flowers, they are no longer massed in the centre of the smarter tables. Small sets of crystal or pottery containers are used for single blossoms at the corners or in a row on each side, or even for one row down the centre. If the china is flowered, the same fresh flowers are often used.

Fruits, vegetables and nuts, especially as the holiday season comes on, can also fit into matching or contrasting color schemes.

Cut glass, in simpler designs than our grandmothers knew, is back in time for Christmas. If you use it, keep everything else simple—flamboyant colors or bizarre designs will make a table set with cut glass look cheap.

Quick Supper Lets Wife Take a Day Off

A topping of chopped Brazil nuts adds not only to the flavor of savory baked macaroni, but to the nutritive elements as well.

By MARY E. DAGUE

TO-DAY came a card announcing an auction sale of antiques, to begin at 10 o'clock in the morning. I can't miss it and there is no telling what time I'll get home with an uneasy conscience and a carful of things I probably had no business to buy.

Fortunately the date of the sale is far enough ahead for me to make necessary preparations. The best way to overcome my sense of guilt is to serve my family an unusually good dinner that night, but it takes advance planning to get dinner on the table in half an hour after you step into the kitchen.

This is the way I shall do it. In the morning I'll get my salad ready so that all I'll have to do will be to take it from the refrigerator and put it on the table.

The dessert will be made and put in the ice-box to chill.

QUICK-COOKING VEGETABLES

I'll have a vegetable that will cook in twenty minues, such as cauliflower, or I'll cook one in the morning and reheat in its sauce or seasoning at the last minute.

If I have potatoes I'll cook them in the morning and reheat in a cream sauce.

Fish, as it is packed and shipped these days, can be cooked with practically no preliminary preparations. Oysters are a standby for last-minute dinners. Oyster stew, escalloped oysters, creamed on toast, en brochette, baked with macaroni, pigs in blankets—all these oyster dishes are delicious and nourishing and can be on the table in thirty minutes' time.

Liver, link sausage, pork tenderloin, beef tenderloin, broiled hamburg and other chopped meats, thinly sliced veal and the smoked pork products that can be broiled or pan-broiled all can be quickly prepared and cooked. And there are always steaks and chops.

Here is the menu for a quick meal:

The savory macaroni is prepared and put in its baking dish all ready to pop in the oven just long enough to be heated through.

The lettuce is washed and put in the vegetable pan in the ice-box and the dressing is mixed and put in a bottle for a final shaking before serving.

SAVORY MACARONI

Five ounces macaroni, 3 quarts boiling water, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ pound cheese, 1 cup chopped Brazil nuts, 2 cups canned tomatoes, salt, pepper, sugar.

Cook macaroni in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and blanch. Arrange in a buttered baking dish, baking in alternate layers with nuts and thinly sliced cheese. Rub tomatoes through a coarse sieve and season with salt and pepper and sugar. Pour over macaroni mixture and bake twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.), or until the cheese is melted.

Glamorous Gowns Are Like Magic Wands

FORTUNATE WEARER TAKES ON GUISE OF AGES-OLD ROMANCE

By MARIAN YOUNG

DO YOU prefer to look like a figure from a Renaissance painting, classic Greek statuary or an Oriental romance come to life when you don your evening finery this winter? Fashion offers you your choice.

Your gown of heavy upholstery fabric, shimmering satin or luxurious velvet in Titian red, mellowed gold, Veronese green, Como blue or Vatican purple, will mold your waistline and accent your chest. Its belt will be studded with jewels. You will wear a heavy, jewel-studded cross, bracelets or a tiara to match.

If it is black velvet and trimmed, harness fashion, with rows of seed pearls, likely enough you will cover your curls with a pearl cap to match. You will carry the daintiest of compacts, perhaps one of needlepoint. You will walk and dance in a very ladylike, almost helpless sort of way. In fact, you will do all you can to convince others that you condescended to step out of the painting just for this one night.

On the other hand, your figure and type may end themselves well to a fluttering, flowing, draped Grecian gown. In heavy sheer or crepe that falls into soft folds, you may step forth in a model, pleated from neckline to hem, giving the illusion of an animated marble column, moving gracefully among the dancers. For this, you can pick soft pinks, pure white, romantic looking rusts and wines, or clear, soft blues.

Other Grecian gowns include the types that are shirred across the front with flowing draperies falling in lovely cascades from the shoulders. With these, you will wear flat Grecian sandals and you will pile your hair high on your head.

If you want to create a sensation, consider a gown of East Indian inspiration, complete with jewel-studded girdle and Sari that covers your head and frames your face.

One especially nice triple sheer East Indian gown, sketched here to-day, comes in gold, is decorated with a jeweled belt and has a Sari which may be worn up over the head or down around the shoulders, cape fashion.

Don't forget that jewelry takes on a new importance this season. Get out all the old family jewels, polish them up or have them reset. If you haven't any, shop carefully for enormous pieces of costume jewelry that look a good deal like the ones your grandmother should have left and didn't.

OTHERS ARE LESS DRAMATIC

Of course, if you are the healthy, athletic type and can't bear to look like an animated painting, moving column or a woman from a harem, there are simple evening gowns with just the right flares and pleats to flatter your figure. Pleats, as a matter of fact, are used in profusion. Necklines are a good deal lower, both in front and back.

For semi-formal occasions or for parties on boats where breezes are apt to whistle down the back of your neck, there are the always-becoming, long-sleeved, floor-length evening gowns like Adrian, Hollywood designer, does for Greta Garbo and Joan Crawford.

(Costumes designed by Adele Smithline Simpson.)

Columnist Finds Much Broadway On Early Round of Hollywood

By PAUL HARRISON
The Times Staff Correspondent

Hollywood.—Hang on for a hurried first round of the major studios to see what is going on in this town. The production schedule shows that there should be plenty of stellar faces familiar to a former Broadway reporter.

The Goldwyn studio is shooting "Shoot the Chutes," and there is Eddie Cantor working under the lights in many retakes of a simple door-closing scene. Some actors might be incensed by Norman Taurog's painstaking direction, but Cantor, when he has a chance to rest, fairly bubbles in praise of his boss.

The pop-eyed comic always has been a completely unabashed sentimentalist.

Who is the blonde working on the embroidery and occasionally stabbing blindly at the dish of chocolate ice cream beside her? Sally Eilers, of course; stupid of me.

Here is a chorus rehearsal, and the director is Manhattan's Bob Alton. We are told the girls particularly want to work for him, in the hope that he will take them east for a Broadway show. For that, paradoxically, would be the shortest route to featured roles on the screen.

GOOD PLACE TO EAT

A few miles southwest is Culver City and, first, the Fox studio. In contains the best of all studio restaurants, complete with murals. Right now, too, it is the most colorful lunching spot in town, for the place is jammed with performers from several brilliant costume pictures.

There is big Victor McLaglen with Freddie Bartholomew. The latter does not act like a kidnapped child; you must admire his poise as he munches and chats while a still photographer takes pot-shots of him from all angles, and hundreds stare.

Warner Baxter, Alice Faye, and Jack Oakie are making "King of Burlesque," and in this scene I get a snicker from thinking how widely at odds are the Hollywood censors and Gotham's Brothers Minsky in matters of costuming thigh-grinders.

M-G-M is nearby, and there is a lot of activity there. . . . Here are the "Riff-raff" sets—shabby slum rooms, a prison warden's office, the prison itself. And Jean Harlow in a little one-piece frock of drab prison gingham and flat-heeled slippers—the delinquent mode.

Her new, blonde-brown hair is perfectly coiffed, but her face is lined from a hard day of weeping. They have been shooting some of the sad scenes, and Jean is tired. . . . Spencer Tracy is tired, too,—tired of learning all the changes they keep putting into his script.

"The Great Ziegfeld" is being photographed all over the lot, so I should find a good many familiar New York faces. . . . There are Fanny Brice, who matriculated with the glorifying Follies in 1910, and Ann Pennington, who in Ziegfeld's class of '13 was voted the girl whose legs were most likely to succeed. They are watching a scene in which Ziegfeld and Sandow, his strong-man protege, attend the world's fair of 1892. William Powell wandered over presently to shake hands, and to ask whether I think he looks like the late Flo. . . . I admit frankly that I do not believe he does, but declare the picture will be the better for it.

SONG IN THE AIR

From the huge open door of another stage drifts a nostalgic ditty—"Indian Love Call." Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy are starring in "Rose Marie," and we are in time for a rehearsal, with full orchestra, of the hit song. . . . Wearing pyjamas, Jeanette sits beside Eddy and sings without histrionics

That fellow over there dressed as a Canadian mountie is the only man on the lot to-day who belongs in uniform. For he actually is a mountie, hired as an adviser on realism. Ever since production started, he has been battling to get Eddy's hair cut according to the regulations of his service. . . . The big fellow with the close-cropped greying hair, ordinary blue sack suit, and the manners of a detective sergeant is W. S. Van Dyke, least Hollywooden of all Hollywood directors.

JUST LIKE BROADWAY

At Warner Brothers you may see part of the filming of another and greater, Broadway success—"Petrified Forest." Leslie Howard and Humphrey Bogart are playing the same roles they had in New York, and for the feminine lead I believe I prefer Bette Davis to Gotham's Peggy Conklin. . . . Howard tells me that the picture almost exactly follows the play's pattern, even to the most un-Hollywooden ending.

The set here interests me almost more than the spectacular one for "Captain Blood." The entire huge building has been transformed into Arizona desert. The floor has been covered with sand and desert vegetation, and a painted cyclorama carries on the illusion to the horizon on every side.

I am tickled to notice that the threatening spines have been plucked from nearby cacti, and relatively harmless toothpicks substituted.

There is some difference of opinion as to who is the centre of attraction here. To Bette Davis it seems to be Paul Harrison, at left, but to both Harrison and Leslie Howard, at right, it is Bette herself. And who would deny that?

Parents Lose Boy Film Star

NEW ROMANCE, FORTUNE FOR JACKIE COOGAN

Famous "Kid's" Twenty-first Birthday Marked by Initial Trust Fund of $250,000 and Party by Betty Grable

Hollywood.—Coming into the money at twenty-one might be the signal to some pampered heirs for a rousing reception, but it was nothing more than a happy birthday to Jackie Coogan.

He came into the money when he became twenty-one, October 21—to the tune of $250,000, a fourth of the estimated million that his parents had salted away for him out of the pay he got during his highly successful days as a child star.

But there was more to the party than the quarter million. It was the fact that the flashingly blonde Betty Grable gave it in Jackie's honor.

No, not Toby Wing. That affair is definitely off. Jackie and Toby had been going together for some time. But young hearts will flutter and cool down, and so now it is Betty Grable for Jackie. To prove her admiration for the young man who made his name in filmdom seventeen years ago as "The Kid," Betty gave him his birthday party.

MORE LATER

Neither Jackie nor his mother cares to discuss the matter of the trust fund that had been laid away for him. But it is generally surmised that Jackie's twenty-first birthday brought him a cool quarter million dollars, as the first installment.

When he gets to be twenty-five, Jackie is due to get another $250,000, and five years after that the remainder of the million-dollar trust fund will be his.

What he will do with the first quarter million is still problematical. Mrs. Coogan has intimated that the fund will still be handled by the family's attorney, Arthur L. Bernstein, and that Jackie will continue to draw his regular allowances from Jackie Coogan Productions Inc., of which he is president.

But Jackie, a senior at the University of Southern California, would like to get into film work of some kind, so perhaps his first big investment will be in the field that made him famous.

STUDYING FOR FILMS

In fact, his major studies at U.S.C. have been cinematography, drama appreciation and music. So, although his mother would like to have him take up law after his graduation next June, young Coogan seems to be inclined toward the movies.

Whether he will resume acting, however, is doubtful. Jackie has never reached the height to which he had climbed as "The Kid." After that successful production, he played in several films that gave him an opportunity to display his talent. But all his fans can remember of him is his work with Charlie Chaplin.

Last year, he appeared in "Home On the Range," and caused scarcely a ripple of interest among fans.

BRITISH COIFFURE

Anybody who would like to know a hundred reasons why United States actresses should not go to England to make pictures can get them all from Wynne Gibson. Wynne is pretty hot on the subject. But just the same the Britishers sent her back here with a brand new personality.

Yes, the hairdressers burned so much of her hair off that she now has practically a boyish bob. And becoming, too—even if not deliberate.

If you wonder what has ever happened to Jackie Coogan, the baby star who made such a hit as "The Kid" with Charlie Chaplin, stop worrying. He became twenty-one on October 26 and as a birthday gift he received one-fourth of the 1,000,000 trust fund which his parents wisely had salted away for him. He will get another $250,000 when he is twenty-five, and the rest when he is thirty.

Movie Gossip

Marlene Dietrich and Gary Cooper are summoned to work these days by a bell. Instead of shouting "Quiet" the assistant to Frank Borzage, director, rings a bell which he has installed on the "Desire" set.

Hollywood, forever on the search for the new, has turned to George du Maurier's classic, "Peter Ibbetson," for its latest inspiration. Gary Cooper and Ann Harding are starred.

Colin Tapley, sole survivor of the picture "Search for Beauty" prospects, and Betty Holt, four-year-old sister of David Holt, have been given extensions on their contract options.

Bing Crosby, in the picture "Anything Goes," has the largest stable of thoroughbreds owned by a screen celebrity. He has fifteen in training at Santa Anita.

Katherine De Mille, Glenn Erickson and Benny Baker have been picked to support Larry "Buster" Crabbe in Zane Grey's romance, "Drift Fence."

Members of the troupe of Walter Wanger's all-color "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," have breakfast at 5.45 a.m. while on location at Big Bear Lake, California.

Carole Lombard, featured in "Hands Across the Table," is a tennis enthusiast. She plays every day, sometimes arising at 6 o'clock in the morning when she is working in a picture, to get in her two sets a day.

Benny Baker, William Collier Sr., Philip Merivale and Sidney Toler have been added to the cast of Paramount's new Jan Kiepura-Gladys Swarthout musical film, "Give Us This Night."

Cecil B. De Mille, director of the picture "The Crusaders," ran away from school to enlist in the army during the Spanish-American war, but was refused because he was too young.

Grace Bradley, who has not been out of Hollywood since she arrived there more than two years ago, is planning a New York vacation when she finishes her present role in "Anything Goes."

Betty Burgess, eighteen-year-old girl whom Paramount Studios took from her classes for "Coronado," continues to attend high school art instruction when not needed at the studio.

Because he has decided to make his home in Hollywood, Joe Penner, now working in "Collegiate," is rejecting all radio offers that would force him to go east.

Gladys Swarthout, co-star of "Rose of the Rancho," first studied singing with the aid of her older sister, Roma, a talented pianist.

Mae West learned to strum a guitar so that she could accompany herself on the songs she sings in "Klondike Lou."

Out-dated Bath Needed For Film

Hollywood. — An out-dated tin bathtub was the object of one of the most intensive searches in Hollywood, and it was in vain!

The search began when preparations were made for a sequence in Claudette Colbert's picture, "The Bride Comes Home," with Fred MacMurray.

To make a very modest apartment in an old-fashioned district in Chicago complete, it was necessary to have a tin bathtub installed in the bathroom.

The property department did not have one, so they started telephoning plumbing supply houses and wrecking companies. There was not a single tin bathtub available. The studio had to content itself with an antiquated porcelain one.

Allen's Voice For Technicolor

Hollywood.—Fred Allen is again on the radio chains after an invasion of Hollywood where he appeared in his first screen feature, "Thanks a Million," was in good form while being interviewed in his New York hotel suite late last week. The interviewer asked the comedian if he sang any songs, in his new picture, to which Allen replied: "I'm saving my voice for technicolor—in order to get accurate recording of blue notes."

The Screen Version of "Mutiny on the Bounty"

Here is a review of the motion picture, "Mutiny On the Bounty," as given by Andre Senwald, published in The New York Times:

"Mutiny On the Bounty," from the novels by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall; screen play by Talbot Jennings, Jules Furthman and Carey Wilson; musical score by Herbert Stothart; directed by Frank Lloyd; a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production.

Bligh	Charles Laughton
Christian	Clark Gable
Byam	Franchot Tone
Smith	Herbert Mundin
Ellison	Eddie Quillan
Bacchus	Dudley Diggs
Burkett	Donald Crisp
Sir Joseph Banks	Henry Stephenson
Captain Nelson	Francis Lister
Mrs. Byam	Spring Byington
Tehani	Movita
Maimiti	Mamo
Maggs	Ian Wolfe
Morgan	Ivan Simpson
Fryer	De Witt Jennings
Muspratt	Stanley Fields
Morrison	Wallace Clark
Hayward	Vernon Downing
Tinkler	Dick Winslow

The weird and wonderful history of H.M.S. Bounty is magnificently transferred to the screen in "Mutiny On the Bounty," which will appear on the screen here shortly. Grim, brutal, sturdily romantic, made out of horror and desperate courage, it is as savagely exciting and rousingly dramatic a photoplay as has come out of Hollywood in recent years. The Nordhoff-Hall trilogy was, of course, born to be filmed, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has given it the kind of production a great story deserves. As the sadistic master of the Bounty, the barbarous madman who was half god and half devil, Charles Laughton has the perfect role, and he plays it perfectly. Frank Lloyd, well remembered for "The Sea Hawk and "Cavalcade," has performed a distinguished job of direction. For all its great length, this is just the perfect adventure picture.

The film concentrates on the first two volumes of the trilogy, "Mutiny On the Bounty" and "Men Against the Sea," and touches only slightly on the fate of the mutineers as they prepare to face permanent exile with their Tahitian women on the uncharted Pitcairns Island. If the work has a flaw, it stems from Metro's characteristic prodigality. This is a crowded and fascinating canvas, but the film tends to become slack and dissipate some of its terrifying power because of the sheer burden it imposes on the spectator of watching the screen for more than two hours.

The history of the celebrated naval case will not suffer if I summarize it briefly. In 1787 H.M.S. Bounty, commanded by the able but intolerably savage Lieutenant Bligh, left England bound for Tahiti. The spirit of revolt grew among both officers and men during the voyage as Bligh's mania for discipline increased in fury. Discharging her cargo at Tahiti, the Bounty was sailing for home when Christian, the second in command, led the mutinous sailors and seized the ship. Bligh and eighteen loyal men were set adrift with the ships launch in mid-Pacific, while the triumphant mutineers put back to Tahiti.

Miraculously Bligh took his open boat 3,600 miles across the ocean to the Dutch East Indies, a feat that is almost unparalleled for skill and courage in nautical annals. In the photoplay, though not in fact, Bligh commands the second British ship which pursues the mutineers and is wrecked in the futile search. Midshipman Byam and several other loyal seamen who were forced to accompany the rebels were returned to England for trial. Condemned with the rest, Byam, in the film, is pardoned after an eloquent speech in which he informs the courtmartial of the conditions which drove Christian and the crew to mutiny.

Mr. Laughton's performance as the incredible Bligh is a fascinating and almost unbearable portrait of a sadist who took rapturous delight in watching men in pain. We get the full horror of his personality early in the film when a seaman, convicted of striking an officer, is ordered to be lashed on every vessel in the fleet. Brought to the Bounty, he is discovered to be already dead from his previous floggings, but Bligh, observing the cold letter of the regulations, insists that the corpse receive the appointed forty lashes in full view of his officers and men. His penalties for minor offences are the judgments of a maniac. From the swish of the lash he derives a lewd joy.

Bligh's reign of terror on the Bounty is described with such relish that in time you discover yourself wincing under the lash and biting your mouth to keep from crying out. Yet, on the astounding odyssey in the small boat, Bligh becomes a man of heroic stature, fiercely guiding the rudder through the ocean wastes while his men lose their senses from thirst and hunger. I could have wished that these superb sequences telling of Bligh's indomitable will to live and find vengeance had been extended at the expense of the romantic business on Tahiti. At the courtmartial the film punishes Bligh by submitting him to the contempt of his fellow officers. History, kinder to this amazing man, discloses that he rose to be an admiral in the King's navy.

There are numerous performances of excellence under the relentless eye of Mr. Laughton, notably Clark Gable as the rebellious second-in-command, Franchot Tone as the humane Midshipman Byam, Dudley Diggs as the magnificently drunk ship's doctor, Herbert Mundin as a timorous mess boy, Eddie Quillan as a victim of the press gang and a dozen others. "Mutiny On the Bounty" contains the material of half a dozen adventure pictures. It is superlatively thrilling.

SINGING STAR DENIES THRILL

Hollywood. — For the benefit of wistful girl movie fans who yearn to be kissed by a handsome movie star, Gladys Swarthout reports that her first screen kiss aroused no soul-searing emotions.

A girl's first kiss is reputedly a never-to-be-forgotten event, but this brunette opera star says she will have to judge by her second cinematic osculation, when and if it occurs.

It was during a love scene of "Rose of the Rancho," in production, when John Boles took Miss Swarthout in his arms and implanted a soulful kiss on her lips. They clung together in an ecstatic embrace.

KISS STUNS STAR

"Whew!" sighed Miss Swarthout as she dropped the "clinch" and sat down in the nearest chair. Then she made her confession.

"That was the first time I have ever been kissed on the stage or screen," she said. "I know my face is burning, but to tell the truth I did not get much of a thrill out of it —with all due respect to John Boles.

"I had not thought much about what a screen kiss would do to me. And before the scene began my mind was fastened entirely on what I was going to say—not on what I was going to do.

FINDS NO THRILL

"You see, I never had a role at the Metropolitan opera that called for a kiss. So when John and I kissed, I kept asking myself how it would look on the screen instead of thrilling to it as perhaps I should have. Perhaps if we had to do the scene over again it would be different."

Feted By Fame and Fortune
